A FEAT OF ENGINEERING.

R. O. King, son of R. W. King, and associated with him in the King Construction Co., Toronto, Can., has recently proven his right to the name of an engineer of no mean order. To him belongs the credit of originating the novel plan, after others had failed, for successfully raising the steamship Bavarian, which ran on Wye Rock, on the St. Lawrence river, November 3, 1905.

The plan was an adaptation of the compressed air principle used in sinking great caissons for bridges, or tunneling under rivers. Air is forced into the caisson or tunnel and maintained at such a pressure as to drive out the mud and water and prevent the chamber from refilling.

After the Lloyds, the English experts, had made an unsuccessful attempt to float the steamer by the old methods, Captain Leslie secured the right to make another trial. To Captain Leslie R. O. King and his associate, W. W. Wotherspoon, proposed the air-pressure plan. It seemed feasible and Captain Leslie acceded to the proposal and a syndicate was formed. The capital required was about $30,000.

Men who were accustomed to working under enormous air-pressures, called "sand hogs," were secured to the number of about forty. Divers were also engaged, Mr. King and Mr. Wotherspoon working in their diving suits with the rest.

After the sides and decks of the vessel had been strengthened with planks to prevent the ship from blowing up, the work of forcing in the air began. The different compartments were treated as caissons and the hold and ship's ballast were also filled with compressed air. Slowly but surely the water in the hold was forced out and the great vessel became light enough to walk off the rocks. Tugs were on hand to tow her to Quebec.

After the vessel was floated the main task was to maintain the pressure sufficiently to keep the water out until a safe harbor could be reached. The work was accomplished, however, without any serious mishap, and a vessel, which with cargo was valued at $1,000,000, was saved. The syndicate's share is one-half the valuation.

Mr. King is a graduate of McGill University and afterwards studied at Harvard. He speaks modestly of the achievement, but to him, doubtless more than to any other man, belongs the credit of originating an idea which is destined to revolutionize the methods of raising sunken vessels.

USE A STEAM TRAP.

I am building a range of houses and in excavating for the boiler pit I struck water four feet below the surface. Can I heat economically with the boiler two or three feet below the greenhouse floor by using a trap? What is the best system for me to install? J. L. J.

If you are to use steam, and can maintain a minimum pressure of six pounds upon the system at all times, you should have no difficulty in getting satisfactory service from a return trap by bringing all the condensation back to a hot well and lifting it from the well to boiler by means of a return trap. L. C. C.

TROUBLE WITH HEATING.

I have installed a boiler which is not doing well. My house is 18x100 feet. The heater is 2½x10 feet, and has twenty-two 3-inch flues, one 3-inch outlet in the top for the flow and one 3-inch in the bottom for the return. The overhead system of piping is used. There is one 3-inch flow under the ridge, with a rise of eighteen inches above the boiler and then gradually rising to the other end of the house, where I have a vent pipe about a foot higher than the expansion tank, which is above the heater, connected to the return just before entering the boiler. This flow feeds six 3-inch returns, which are under the benches, gradually sloping to the heater. Can one 3-inch flow feed six 3-inch returns? Is one 3-inch outlet for the flow enough, or would two flows be better? The grate is 2½x2½ feet and the area of the flue is 12x16 inches. Is my number of pipes sufficient for a temperature of 50 degrees in Kentucky climate? G. O. K.

The piping you have installed is as nearly correct in amount as it is possible to make it for a temperature of 50 degrees. The arrangement is satisfactory and the sizes are all right. The 3-inch flow should feed the six returns without difficulty. The only changes I can suggest are these: Place an aircock at the place now occupied by the vent pipe, then elevate the expansion tank to at least fifteen feet above the top of the boiler, make a good fire and note results. Open the air valve a couple of times a day to see that there is no air in the system. With these changes you should get good results. L. C. C.

PIPE FOR HEATING.

Will you kindly advise me how to pipe a house 18x30, nine feet at the back and four feet in front? One end butts against the boiler-house, the other end and front to be glazed. The house faces the south. I wish to use a 3-inch flow and 2-inch returns and have pipe enough to maintain a temperature of 50 degrees in zero weather. F. H. P.

By using a single 3-inch flow and eleven 2-inch returns you can heat the house to the desired temperature. If you wish to use two flow pipes instead of one, arrange a flow and five 2-inch returns on either side or under the benches. In this arrangement there would be two 3-inch flow pipes and ten 2-inch returns. L. C. C.

Thanksgiving Observations.

After fuller inquiry among my brother florists I find without exception that Thanksgiving business was good with all. It may not be of sufficient importance to salt down a heavy supply, a pernicious and foolish trick for any day or event. Sell at a good price when the demand comes and you will be happier all-round, and remember your customers will always forget and forgive what at the moment they may think an aristocratic price, but seldom will forget that you sold them old, off-colored flowers.

Thanksgiving is certainly not a plant time because there is a dearth of nice plants about then, yet from the turkey day just passed we shall remember that it will be wise to have a good supply of all the leading flowers. W. J. Palmer said all good flowers went quickly. Miss Rachel Rebstock said mums and violets appeared to be the favorites. S. A. Anderson mentioned violets and valley as his leading offerings. H. Keitsch & Son made a specialty of fine mums and carnations. Louis H. Neubeck made a specialty of orchids, with Oncidium varicosum Rogersii in the lead, and Mr. Belsey, on the high-toned west side, had a fine show of Eucharis Amazonica and Lycaste Skinneri. Byrne Bros., on Delaware avenue, thought carnations were in greatest demand. It is good to have a variety, both in taste and supply.

Various Notes.

We were pleased a few days ago to see S. S. Pennock, of Philadelphia. We don't think this cultivated gentleman was traveling for his health or to push business. We may be mistaken, but we think it was more a friendly call to say how-do-you-do to that army of people who do business with his house but never saw his William Penn-like features and his brotherly-love smile.

Another pleasure was the return to life of Walter Mott in the interest of Bobbink & Atkins. Walter has been in retirement for some years in the pretty little city of Jamestown, but finding the seed business there did not grow by leaps and bounds he gave it up and is back again at the old calling he knows so well.

Thanksgiving gave us a chance to test the usefulness of the "Ever Ready Pot Cover," invented and manufactured by William Greever, who is in the employ of W. J. Palmer & Son, of this city. We believe this cover will fill a long-felt want and save lots of valuable time and labor. It will be at Christmas, Easter and other rush times that these ever ready covers will be most appreciated.

W. S.

The Review is the florists' best paper.

The Market.

Thanksgiving was satisfactory and we are looking now for a good Christmas trade. Roses were in full crops and the cut will be lighter for Christmas, but heavy enough to meet demands. Carnations are of good quality, but slow coming in. Christmas bells seem to be a thing of the past with the florists, as every store in town is dangling full of them.

Various Notes.

The Dunkley Floral Co. lost about six boxes of glass in the recent storm. The wind blew off some ventilators and made things lively for a while.

Grofvert & DeSmit's carnations are fine, especially a bench of Queen is in pink of condition. Roses, callas and pot plants are grown here and are doing well.

S. Batson's place is reported to be in good shape. Baby primroses, snap dragon, ten weeks' stocks, and carnations are grown for the wholesale market.

G. Van Bochove & Bro. had a busy Thanksgiving. From 3 a. m. until closing time immense quantities of carnations, roses and mums were handled. Potted mums went well, also other potted plants. Extra help for store and extra teams had to be hired for city delivery. They are also planning to erect three more houses, 27x300, at their new location. The ground already is graded, but the setting in of winter stops further progress. When completed they will have 125,000 feet of glass.

The Central Michigan Nurseries did good business at the old stand. There was a nice supply of roses, carnations, mums and other cut flowers. Their greenhouses are looking well. Carnations are arriving in good shape.

F. W. Meyers, the riverside florist, reports good trade at the cemetery. His carnations are fine. He also intends to put up a house for carnations, 22x200, the coming season. H. M.

Merrill, Wis.—N. Greivelding has two new short-span greenhouses in fine shape. He has five beds in carnations doing well. The beds are one foot high and have a drainage channel under them filled with stones.

We want to have a regular heart to heart talk with you florists, just such a talk as we would have if you called at our New York Office for a price on one of our "bang-up" greenhouses, and when you heard the price—went away and said you "would call again"—but had not called yet—so we called upon you. Probably you would say something like this to us: "Oh, yes, of course, your house is a fine house, we know they'll last, but it's a little more money than we figured on spending just now, so we've about made up our minds to buy our materials locally and do our own erecting." That's just the sort of reply to make us take our coat off and turn our guns on you.

First—Are these local mills equipped with foundry, machine shop, galvanizing plant, priming tanks, etc., to give you every sort of material for your greenhouse? If they never erect their houses, can they know what up-to-date requirements are?

Second—Do they bring their own Cypress direct from the gulf and have millions of feet air-drying two years before a stick is used?

Third—Can you go to their factory and actually see them cutting both blue and white sap places right out of their timber and burning it in their boilers?

Fourth—Do they mill their own materials and furnish the right things to go into the latest improved houses or do they sell materials on hand—a plain lumber selling proposition?

Fifth—Can these concerns' heavy wooden plate with their sashbars toe-nailed directly to it, give you a rigid house—a joint free from decay? Isn't the eave the vital spot in your house—the spot that first goes—and when it starts to go, isn't it all up with your house and you are led from year to year to make repairs that dig right into your profits until the slight additional cost of our material is swallowed up many times over? Then besides all this time you have been running a regular shade trap, giving you poor quality plants, instead of a light, clean cut, up-to-date proposition with top-notch bloom possibilities.

Now here is our suggestion: We want to supply you all the material we can, erect your house if possible—that's exactly what we are in business for—but we also want you to know that we are ready to sell you, by the foot, our ice-clearing eave plate with sashbar clasps attached; our cast iron foot pieces instead of the short-lived wooden posts you had in mind. Put even that many of our strong points into your house and they will give it a new lease of life. Then after you have tried them out you'll be ready to talk real business with us on your next house—perhaps you are ready now?

Have you any or all of our catalogs? Address Lord & Burnham Company, Greenhouse Designers and Manufacturers, 1133 Broadway, New York.

The New Pink Rose AURORA

...A Rose for Everybody...

This Rose is a seedling from Bon Silene and Souvenir du President Carnot. The flowers are large and full, and are produced on strong and stiff stems, with a rich dark green foliage. The color is a beautiful pink with a deeper shading in the center. The keeping quality of the flowers is excellent, and it does not lose its brilliancy of color when kept in the cellar. The habit of growth is strong and vigorous; it has absolutely no tendency to go dormant during the Winter and every shoot has a flower bud.

AURORA has inherited the productiveness of Bon Silene and has the free flowering qualities of this well known, prolific variety. It is easy to grow, and does not need a high temperature.

Plants from 2½-inch pots, own roots, $30.00 per 100; 50 at 100 rate; $250.00 per 1000; 500 at 1000 rate.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.,
March 16, 1906.

MR. F. H. KRAMER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR:—I wish to congratulate you on your new pink rose, "Queen Beatrice." I consider it a rose entirely in a class by itself, and up to the present time I do not think we have anything to compare with it. As a wholesaler, I predict an enormous demand for same, and you can feel assured that whenever the blooms are ready for market, Philadelphia wants its share.

Yours respectfully,
EDWARD REID.

MR. F. H. KRAMER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR:—Permit me to commend you on success in getting the exclusive control of the new pink rose, which you have since named Queen Beatrice.

I consider it a splendid thing, and I believe it will prove one of the most profitable varieties for the grower especially, that we have had in years.

Very truly yours,
Z. D. BLACKISTONE.

Queen Beatrice, the new rose grown by F. H. Kramer, is a beauty. The dark green foliage, long stiff stem, and magnificent flowers, which are simply beautiful at all stages of development, from the small buds to full, open flowers, which have an agreeable fragrance, together with its color, which has a pleasing effect, are sure to make the rose popular and well worthy of the name Queen.

As a seller it ought to be unsurpassed.

DEAR SIR:—In reference to the new rose, "Queen Beatrice," I am pleased to say that I have watched it growing and blooming for more than two years and believe it to be one of the best and most profitable for every cut flower grower, having all the good qualities and apparently no bad ones, it being a free grower of pleasing color on long stiff stems and plenty of them.

Very truly yours,
WM. F. GUDE.

MR. F. H. KRAMER,

DEAR SIR:—With regard to the rose, Queen Beatrice, I beg to state that I had quite some knowledge of it before it came into your possession. I was very much impressed with it and thought it would make a very good commercial rose; the length of stem, size of foliage and beauty of flower, both in shape and color, should strongly commend it to all rose lovers.

Yours very truly,
GEORGE FIELD.

MR. F. H. KRAMER,

DEAR SIR:—The sample blooms of your new rose, Queen Beatrice, came in perfect condition and we want to say "it is a beauty," and we find it lights up perfectly under artificial light and as to its keeping qualities, it is unsurpassed, as it was in perfect form and color several days after received by us.

DEAR SIR:—We do not hesitate to say that the Queen Beatrice would prove a very desirable acquisition to our roses. We are not in a position to speak about its productiveness, etc., we will leave that for the grower to say, but, commercially, its selling qualities are beyond question. We feel confident that we could find a ready market for the flowers, and believe, as from all accounts it is very productive. Queen Beatrice certainly will have a great future.

Wishing you success, we remain,
Yours respectfully,

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Christmas Preparations.

There should be nothing left undone that can possibly be done to prepare for the Christmas trade, which from all signs is going to be a merry time for all and a specially busy time for all florists. As a rule shoppers buy toys, books and all other articles that will keep ahead of time, but they put off till the last few days all purchases in our line. The rush comes the last two days, in spite of all we can do, and three weeks' honest work must be crowded into forty-eight hours. So be prepared with every facility at hand.

A sufficient number of plants of each kind should be trimmed and decorated. It is only in our largest cities that the basket arrangements of plants meet with a ready sale, but a few of different designs should be on display, wherever you are, and if they sell it is easy to make up more. Last week's REVIEW contained many examples of such arrangements, and these can be varied to a great extent. If our goods could be packed up and put on the shelf for future customers, as most of the articles handled by a department store can be, how simple, it seems, would our business be!

Alas, we can do no such thing. If a customer wants a dozen fine carnations or roses, you must show them a vase of 100 and the dozen will be selected out of the lot, and a box ready-lined should be on hand, with suitable paper and other frills that go along with the flowers in these up-to-date days. Have plenty of boxes ready, paper of all qualities, string, etc., so that the least possible delay may occur. This Christmas is likely to be as this day has been for years—a plant festival.

This exchange of gifts at Christmas time has become a great fad; especially is it a burden to grandpas, and yet we florists are the last who should say aught against it. It is beautiful in every way. There are just two things that can be given to anyone without the slightest suspicion that anything serious is meant, and they are a beautiful book or a pretty plant or box of flowers.

Don't Overtrim.

The writer is not a believer in the overtrimming of plants. You cannot enhance the beauty of a plant by tiny bells or rosettes of ribbon. The plant is beauty enough in itself, or should be. Make the receptacle in which it comes as decorative as you like, but don't smother the growing plant with inanimate, lifeless material; but please your customer's taste, whatever it may be. The writer can remember the day when it was thought not improper to send out a plant as a gift with the bare, unadorned red pot. That would not do nowadays with the cheapest purchase. Some green and white tissue paper must envelope the pot of a humble primrose, while a pan of poinsettias or azaleas may have all the frills that your customer is willing to pay for.

This expense is not often of cost to the florist. It can and should be at the expense of the customer, and there is a margin of profit in the mat or pot cover that goes with the plant. It may be necessary with those who do a retail business entirely to display every plant ready for delivery. Those who have greenhouses at their backs have a great advantage on such occasions. They can have a sufficient quantity of plants ready for sale and delivery, and a lot more in the greenhouse that can be trimmed up as soon as sold.

The Division of Labor.

Let me remind you that, whether you have greenhouses adjoining your salesroom, or only a shop, you should under all circumstances have a counter, basement, upstairs room or some place devoted exclusively to the trimming, tying up and delivery of the plants. To mix this up with the selling or waiting on customers is a fatal mistake. Different men are suitable for different jobs. I have known men who were excellent salesmen, who could satisfactorily wait on three customers at the same time, but when it came to getting off a load of plants were lost. So study just what your help is best at and let each one stick to his part.

Gladiolus Harvard.

Handling the Orders.

If you have greenhouses, clear out a house, or part of one, and let there be a space devoted to Sunday, Monday and Christmas day deliveries, and let each salesman be instructed to place each plant in the division set apart for that day. When a purchaser buys only one article, or maybe two, I see no difficulty, but when there is an azalea, an orange tree, a bunch of stevia and a dozen roses, the cut flowers are liable to be forgotten or a long special journey made for their delivery. Therefore, on every tag should be written all that is going to that person's home. For instance, it may read: "Mrs. W. Jennings Richards, two holly wreaths, one pan poinsettias, one pan Roman hyacinths and one dozen Enchantress carnations." If this is faithfully called out, not only will the delivery boy not leave before the order is complete, but it will save a lot of vexation to both ends of the business.

Careful Routing Needed.

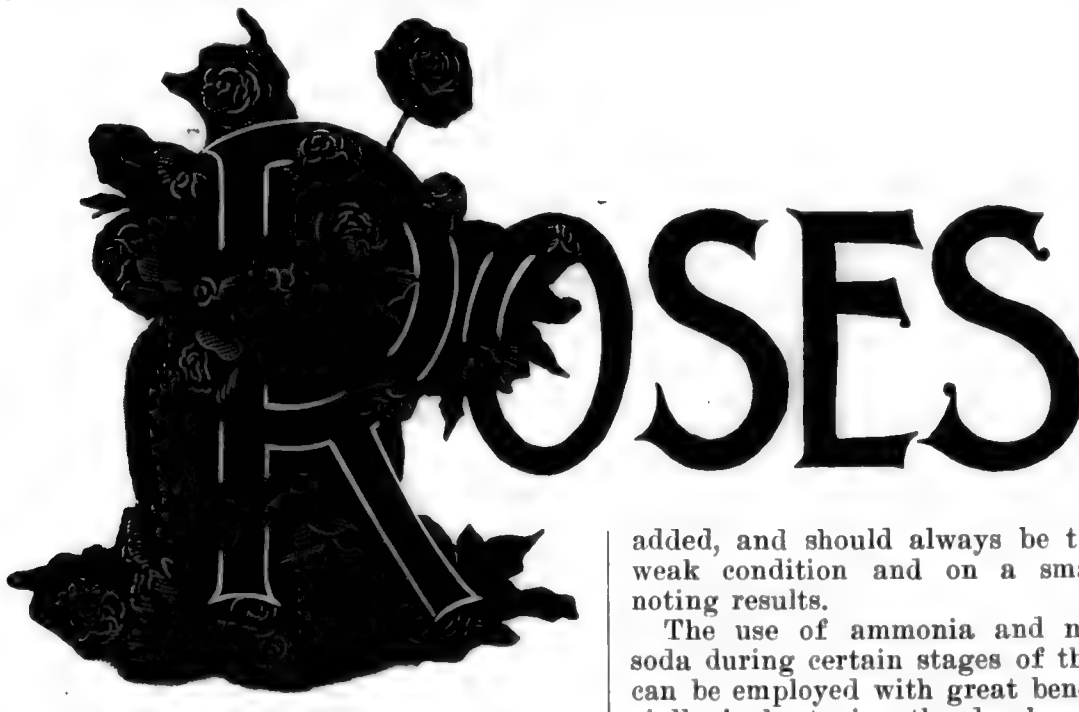
I have had occasion before to mention the great importance of a good routing clerk, a man who knows the city well. Department stores doubtless have this down fine, but we so seldom get such a widespread delivery as these occasions require. Divide your delivery into different sections of the city. People are good-natured at this time of the year, but there are a lot of cranks still on the earth and everyone considers his the most important order given to the firm. When the telephone rings at 8 p. m. and says that "This is Mrs. Jones; where is that azalea that you promised to deliver before 6 p. m.," it causes gray hair to come and wears on your vitality. It behooves you to organize your force to the very best of your ability. WILLIAM SCOTT.

GLADIOLUS HARVARD.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of the latest novelty in gladioli. The variety, named Harvard, originated by Mr. Tracy, is to be introduced by W. W. Rawson & Co., Boston. It is described as the largest and richest-colored gladiolus thus far introduced. The color is a rich, velvety maroon slightly flushed dark scarlet and is expected to make Princeps take a back seat. In size the flower is among the largest known, the spikes often measuring seven inches across and not many of them less than six inches. The plant is a tall grower, the stems straight but not stiff and are lined with eight to fifteen flowers and buds. Six to ten open flowers usually appear at the same time. The flowers do not interfere with each other, as in some of the older types, and the undeveloped buds will open perfectly after the spike is cut.

GREENHOUSE MANAGEMENT.

Should I syringe the carnations and roses on all bright days to prevent red spider? Is fumigating with tobacco stems, or spraying with a solution of nicotine, the best remedy for greenfly, and about how often should it be used? The leaves on my Ponderosa lemons curl up and fall off. What is the cause; also oranges and crotons? E. H. O.



Roses should be syringed on all bright mornings and always early enough to allow time for the foliage to dry. I know one or two growers who syringe their roses every morning, rain or shine, but they are in the great minority, and most good growers syringe only on bright mornings.

Carnations are entirely different. With the exception of the first two weeks after carnations are lifted and put on the benches they need no syringing at all, and good growers of this most popular flower do no syringing till the bright, hot days of May, when it may be necessary to keep down red spider, and the season will be so far advanced that no harm will come from the syringing.

We prefer a solution of some nicotine sprayed on the plants to the old method of burning tobacco stems. Applied with a compressed air bellows it is very effective. If you would rather burn tobacco, then use tobacco dust burned in a pie dish. It will be much more effective than burning the stems, because it will smolder for two hours, until it is all consumed.

The trouble with the leaves of your citrus plants is most likely too high temperature and too dry atmosphere. Keep them in the cool end of your greenhouse. Spray often and keep moist at the root. W. S.

LIQUID FERTILIZERS.

During the remainder of the season, where the plants are in a vigorous growing condition with the benches full of roots, stimulants in a liquid form may be used with great benefit.

Of all the kinds of liquid feeding there is none safer or more effective than that made from fresh cow manure, as it contains all the elements necessary for the purpose and in just about safe proportions, at the same time having little or none of those caustic properties so prevalent in most of the prepared chemical foods.

This manure should be placed in a tank with sufficient water to cause speedy fermentation, which should take place in a temperature of 60 degrees in twenty-four or thirty hours, when the liquid should be drained off and diluted to the strength required. For a first application the concoction should be rather weak, until the plants have become accustomed to this class of food, gradually increasing the strength as results may warrant.

This feeding cannot be indulged in with good results at all stages of growth. The correct time, when the plants can use it with best advantage, is when the young growths for a succeeding crop are from three to four inches in length. An application should be given at least once a week until the buds are well developed and begin to show color, when it should be discontinued. This will materially aid in producing a good cut of high grade roses.

Sheep, poultry and pigeon manure, being of a more caustic nature, should be used more carefully and in a more diluted condition.

This class of food being easily and quickly assimilated should always be used with caution, and especially when any chemically prepared foods are added, and should always be tried in a weak condition and on a small scale, noting results.

The use of ammonia and nitrate of soda during certain stages of the growth can be employed with great benefit, especially in hastening the development of a crop during the short days, but these being very powerful and immediate in their effects will require extra caution in their use, and should not be used for a first application except in a very weak solution, one pound of either to 100 gallons of water being quite strong enough.

During the short days and long nights, when the hours of sunshine are few, it is always safer to be conservative in the use of strong stimulants, rather using them in a weak form and more frequently, than to run any risk by strong doses. As the days lengthen the strength can be gradually increased, keeping all the time a close watch on the effects produced.

Weak or unhealthy stock is unable to use any food in this form, and if so used it will only aggravate any troubles they may be suffering from. Ribes.

ERRATIC WATERING.

Will you kindly tell us what the trouble is with the sample roses sent you? We have never grown roses before. Our present plant is a new one, being built last summer, and of course the roses were planted late, about September 20, in semi-solid beds of tile and cement. The soil was rotted sod and cow manure, well rotted, mixed four to one. Our soil is rather clayey, has some sand and dries out quickly. The roses have been losing leaves since planted. They just seem to dry up and fall off. Are we keeping them too dry, or is it too wet? The mildew and greenfly, of which you will find traces, have only been in about two or three weeks. We have a house 27x300 and would like to save them. L. F. C.

These roses do not seem to be suffering from any disease but have the appearance of having been treated amiss in regard to watering. From the indications the application of water has been very erratic, sometimes being overdry and at other times being saturated. This would account for the scalding of the foliage.

Give the bench a good soaking until every particle of soil is wet and never allow it to again become dry.

If your piping is directly under the benches, examine the soil every day to ascertain if the bed is uniformly moist, and especially at the bottom, where the heat is most intense. This examination should be very critical after applying a mulch, as the manure in the mulch, by absorbing and retaining the moisture, gives the bench the appearance of being wet when the soil near the bottom may be quite dry.

The soil seems in every way suitable for rose culture and can with judicious care in watering, ventilating, etc., be made to produce first-class stock.

VANDA CAERULEA.

Blue colored orchidaceous plants are few in number and Vanda cærulea is the best known of this shade and one of the best commercial orchids. A native of the Khasya hills in India, it has been in cultivation since 1849. The majority of this genus enjoy tropical treatment, but V. cærulea, with V. Amesiana and one or two other sorts, prefers a temperature 5 or 10 degrees lower. It also flowers much better when grown well up to the light, with only a light shade in summer. In Great Britain many growers do not shade vandas at all.

This variety will grow on blocks or in pots, pans or baskets. We prefer the last named receptacles. We use broken potsherds for drainage and a compost of fern fibre mixed with sphagnum. The plants will grow well in pure sphagnum if well drained. The flowering season lasts from September until January. The flowers come quite pale on some plants, especially if grown too hot and dark, but given proper conditions they are of a beautiful cærulean blue. Good spikes will carry ten to twenty flowers, occasionally even more. They keep well, either on the plant or in water.

Yearly importations of these now arrive each spring in America and anyone who has any sale for orchids should try at least a few. A good supply of moisture in the growing season and drier conditions in winter are essential. Plants which have become too tall should have the tops cut off with a sharp knife, with some roots attached, and be placed in small baskets, where they soon establish themselves. W. N. C.

COMMERCIAL ORCHIDS.

[A paper read before the St. Louis Florists' Club December 13, 1906, by G. H. Pring, of the Missouri Botanic Garden.]

Owing to the orchidaceæ being such a large and varied order, I intend to deal only with the genera which have commercial value, as, cattleyas, lælias, cypripediums, odontoglossums, cymbidiums and dendrobiums.

Cattleyas and Laelias.

These closely allied genera, with their large and highly colored flowers, are among the most popular, useful and showy of all orchids. They are natives of Mexico and Brazil, where they are found in the ravines and valleys. In these situations the plants affix themselves indifferently to the trunks and branches of trees, or to the bare rocks in the gorges of the mountains. In this wild state scarcely any soil is found at their roots, only a little moss and a few leaves which have fallen among the stems.

Notwithstanding the enormous extent of territory over which the cattleyas and lælias are spread, there is a similarity in the climatic conditions, thus favoring the horticulturist in being able to cultivate them in the same greenhouse, which is usually termed the cattleya house. The most convenient is a spacious, airy building, well ventilated, running north and south. It is preferable to have all orchid houses lie with this aspect to obtain the full benefit of the sun, light being one of the chief items in successful orchid cultivation. In such a house, cattleyas and lælias enjoy a temperature ranging from 55 degrees to 60 degrees in the winter and 60 degrees in summer, with such increment by sun heat as circumstances admit.

The compost should consist of peat or polypodium fibre and moss, with an addition of cracked crocks, this keeping the compost sweet. Ample drainage is also an important item. Pots proportionate to the size of the plants should be selected. Overpotting, with the object of stimulating the plants into more active growth, is one of the greatest fallacies that can be entertained in orchid culture. The plants should always be potted above the rim of the pot as much as possible to prevent them getting water-logged, and should be potted moderately firm. The best time for repotting is when they begin to emit their new roots, according to the species. During the growing season these plants enjoy a plentiful supply of water at their roots, with a slight spraying overhead. When the growths are mature the water supply should be gradually diminished until enough is needed to prevent shriveling.

The shading of the houses during summer should be of some thin material, just enough to prevent injury to the young growths. A plentiful supply of ventilation during the summer is essential.

The best species commercially are: Cattleyas Trianæ, Mossiæ, labiata, gigas, Percivaliana, and Warneri. Lælias crispa, pumila, purpurata, autumnalis, anceps and its varieties.

Cypripediums.

This is a widely distributed genus, native chiefly of northeast India, found on the lower parts of the Himalayas, Burma and the islands of the Malayan archipelago, and also South America, which is the home of the selenipediums. These differ from the cypripediums in having a three-celled ovary, and the latter a one-celled, a difference, though, not strongly marked in the inflorescence, the scapes producing a succession of flowers, several being open at the same time.

Cypripediums, commonly called lady slippers, are no doubt the easiest to cultivate. More hybrids have been raised by the hands of the hybridist than any other genus, the seedlings flowering in the course of two and one-half to three and one-half years. When imported plants are received it is advisable to lay them out on damp moss, with a slight spraying occasionally, to induce them to emit new roots. They may be potted without fear in a mixture of peat and moss in equal parts, with a little charcoal.

Such species as Spicerianum, bellatulum and concolor enjoy an addition of fibrous loam and crushed crocks. They should be given a plentiful supply of water during the summer, both at their roots and leaves. Heavy shading during summer is necessary to prevent the leaves becoming yellow through the strong rays of the sun. The temperature should be kept as near as possible in the winter from 60 degrees to 65 degrees and not less than 65 degrees in the summer. Such species as insigne, etc., enjoy an intermediate temperature. A suitable time for repotting is in spring, about March being preferable. When the plants are in full growth a little liquid manure applied occasionally will be beneficial.

Odontoglossums.

This most popular genus of the cool-house orchid is distributed throughout the mountainous region facing the Pacific, extending from Peru to the southern portion of Mexico. The Columbian districts being very rich, yield the most sorts. Odontoglossum crispum and O. triumphans are quite common. It is quite a common occurrence in the London salesrooms for such prices as $5,000 to be paid for single specimens of O. Pittianum. Although odontoglossums are indigenous to tropical countries, they are found at considerable altitudes, growing on trees, etc.; hence the majority are better accommodated in a cool-house, where an abundance of moisture can be obtained all the year round, combined with a free circulation of air.

The tropical heat here in St. Louis in the summer is detrimental to the majority of the cool-house orchids. Although the Mexican species, such as, Odontoglossum citrosmum, apiatum, cordatum, Insleayi, grande, Cervantesii and Rossii, which need an intermediate temperature, can be grown successfully with a little attention.

A good general compost for potting odontoglossums consists of equal parts of fibrous peat, fresh, chopped sphagnum moss, with an addition of crushed crocks and silver sand. The best time for repotting is about the end of September, or in the month of March, according to the condition of the plants. Careful watering is necessary after potting to prevent the growths from damping off, especially such species as Cervantesii and Rossii. During summer a plentiful supply of water is essential, both at their roots and leaves. Heavy shading is necessary for these cool-house plants, lath roller blinds being the best, as they can easily be manipulated.

Cymbidiums.

This is a popular, though not a large genus of orchids, dispersed over the Indo-Malayan region and Japan.

The cymbidiums are of robust habit, having stout pseudo-bulbs and thick, fleshy roots, which are freely produced, providing they have ample pot-room for development. The compost should consist of good fibrous loam and peat in the proportion of two-thirds of the former and one-third of the latter. Ample drainage should be provided, with an abundance of water during the growing season, keeping them fairly moist during winter. A shady corner in the cool-house, where an abundance of moisture can be obtained, should be provided for the successful cultivation of these plants. Repotting should be accomplished after the flowering period, when the new growths have started.

The most popular species are C. Lowianum, giganteum, eburneum, Tracyanum, and Hookerianum.

Dendrobiums.

This large and most interesting genus of epiphytal orchids has a very large distribution over the old world, found chiefly in India, Burma, Assam and the islands of the Malayan archipelago. The richest districts are the Himalayas. The dendrobiums indigenous to these districts are enveloped in a humid atmosphere, during their growing period, owing to the enormous amount of vapor which ascends from the Bay of Bengal, which is eventually precipitated as rain. After this comes the dry season, which generally lasts about two or three months, thus enabling them to have complete repose.

For successful cultivation these plants require a special house, where approximately the natural conditions can be given. The compost should consist of peat and moss in equal parts, with an addition of crushed crocks. During the growing period a plentiful supply of water should be applied to their roots, and an occasional spraying overhead. When the growths are mature the water supply should be diminished considerably, just enough being given to prevent the growths becoming too shriveled. The temperature during their resting period should be about 50 degrees to 55 degrees. During summer the minimum should be 60 degrees. Repotting should be accomplished after the flowering period, when the new growths have started. Shading should consist of some thin material, just enough to prevent harm to the young growths.

The chief commercial species are D. nobile, Wardianum, Phalænopsis and formosum giganteum.

GLADIOLI FOR EASTER.

When is the right time to start Gladiolus Colvillei for Easter? H. W.

The species Colvillei is entirely distinct from the hybrids of Gandavensis, being much smaller in bulb, leaf and flower. There is a form or variety of this species known as The Bride which is possibly meant in the above inquiry. Our experience is that it is not easy to force. Two years ago we planted them on a portion of bench where some variety of carnations had turned out unsatisfactorily and a certain percentage flowered in early April. It has a most beautiful, delicate spike of flowers and when we better understand the wants will rank high among our choice cut flowers. Will not some one who has flowered this gladiolus please write it up and oblige H. W. and W. S. and many others? W. S.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

Chrysanthemums are everywhere just now, and from the commercial aspect the cut bloom has been greatly overdone; no market throughout the country has escaped being more or less glutted. Single mums are in great favor this season. Each year they become more popular, and when a good sort is grown there is probably nothing to equal them as a pot plant. W. Wells & Co., of Merstham, are giving us a couple of fine new single varieties, which will probably be in the near future standard florists' varieties both on account of the color and also the ease with which they may be grown. Edith Harling is a fine yellow. Merstham White is pure and the center a very distinct golden, a very useful commercial variety.

One of the oldest nurseries in London has been compelled to move out into the country in search of purer air. Messrs. Wimsett have lately carried on a high-class decorating business and have executed many important and extensive floral decorations at Buckingham Palace. The firm is also one of the leaders for distinctive landscape work and summer bedding.

W. Poupart, of Tweekenham, was the recipient of a handsome silver tea and coffee service, valued at over $1,000, on the occasion of the annual dinner of the Market Gardeners' Association, of which Mr. Poupart has been president for many years. J. B.

WINTERING BOX TREES.

I have a few box trees to winter. How should they be cared for? Will they stand freezing? Should they be kept in a light or dark cellar?

G. P. G.

Keep them in a cool house or cool, light shed. Keep the roots moist and a few degrees of frost will not hurt. The same place that you winter your sweet bays will do for the box trees. It would be a mistake to put them in a dark room or cellar. Give them light and keep the roots moist and not over 5 degrees of frost and you will be all right. W. S.

SINGLE CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

Single chrysanthemums are having a strong run in popular favor in England just now and, indeed, along the eastern coast of the United States they have made some progress in public esteem. The best of the newer singles is said to be Crown of Gold, illustrated herewith. It is described as a beautiful and very large variety with flowers fully five inches across, and of a delightful and rather bright shade of old gold. It is one of the best that Mr. Pagram, of the Whim Gardens, Weybridge, has raised. It gained a first-class certificate from the National Chrysanthemum Society, and has now, according to the Gardeners' Magazine, passed into the hands of Cragg, Harrison & Cragg, of Heston, for distribution.

MR. GODFREY'S VIEWS.

In the last issue I note W. J. Godfrey rather questions the commendatory remarks I made anent Mrs. Henry Barnes as an exhibition variety. He does not take into account the difference that climatic conditions make, perhaps. From what I have seen I do not think that many of the Australians show up so well in England as they do here, notable cases in point being W. Duckham and Nellie Pockett with its sport, Cheltoni, likewise the wonderful showing Beatrice May has made all over this country.

On the other hand many splendid English seedlings do not amount to anything here. One of Mr. Godfrey's own, Mary Godfrey, was very nice with me this year as an early yellow, but if he could see his Bessie Godfrey, Godfrey's King, Sensation and some others of his seedlings as they show up here, he would feel like disowning them. Yet these varieties are splendid in England, as any one who reads a British horticultural periodical knows, Bessie Godfrey perhaps having stood longer as the premier yellow in England than any other variety.

Mr. Godfrey shows a correct knowledge of what we need here in the commercial line of flower and while his new Mary Donnellan, if it is a Japanese, is hardly the proper form for us, if it is the color he states we must certainly try it. Charles H. Totty.

MUMS AND VEGETABLES.

I find that after taking off the last crop in the spring from my greenhouse I can bring on a fall crop of mums, providing I can put off planting in the benches until the last week in July, with the exception of a few early varieties which I can plant in June. To grow mums for the wholesale market, could I bring on the late varieties in pots and plant in the benches when I have them cleared the latter part of July? Can I grow a good crop of mums in solid benches in soil that has been used for lettuce and cucumbers during the winter and spring, and would you advise much additional manure where the soil has been well enriched for the previous crops? What one color and varieties of that color, earlies and lates, would you consider best for wholesale market, sacrificing quantity for quality? How many good cuttings ought I to expect from 100 stock plants? What do you consider the neatest and best method of packing blooms for shipping, size and kind of boxes, paper, and the placing of blooms in the box?

Could you suggest any other crop than mums, or use to which I could put the benches from the last of July to the first of December? W. K.

It is entirely possible for W. K. to grow late kinds by planting the last week in July if he has struck them in June and has them in nice shape in 2½-inch pots. Lots of plants intended to flower by Thanksgiving are planted around that time. Chrysanthemums can be grown in soil that has grown a previous crop providing it is sweet and in good shape. Planting anything into a heavy, soggy, sour soil is worse than useless. But if the mechanical condition of the soil is right it may be enriched by an inch or so of well rotted manure and a sprinkle of bone meal, which should be well worked through the top five inches of the solid bed. Were I figuring on such a proposition I would use the new good soil for the mums, and then, in the early winter, this soil would grow good lettuce; for I have seen this successfully done. At the same time, the best growers do not consider it time wasted to use new soil for every crop.

Single Chrysanthemum Crown of Gold.

As to what one color is best to grow, either white or yellow has the largest sale, and I would suggest, perhaps, yellow, if W. K. only wants one color. A good selection would be as follows: Early, Monrovia, October Sunshine, Halliday; late, Yellow Eaton, Nagoya, Mrs. Geo. Beech, Yellow Chadwick.

The amount of cuttings that can be taken from a given number of stock plants depends almost entirely on the skill of the propagator and the condition of the stock plants. In a recent issue I gave about twenty plants as being an average number to obtain from a healthy stock plant. On that basis W. K. will produce 2,000 plants from his 100 stock plants.

There are many styles of packing the blooms, as W. K. will see if he ever strolls through the wholesale market of a big city during the mum rush. From the shoebox to an 8-foot coffin, every style of box in brought into requisition. The best way for any shipper is to go to his agent and have a business talk with him, and if that commission agent knows his business (and most of them do) he can set him right in short order as to styles of packing for his trade.

I know of no crop that W. K. could put in for the late summer months that would bring in the money that mums would. Melons might be tried, perhaps, if W. K. has a market that would take a choice article in that line.

CHAS. H. TOTTY.

WATERING.

Is it feasible to water in the morning, say 7 a. m., when the thermometer outside stands from 15 to 20 degrees above zero, or is it best to wait until 9 or 9:30 a. m., especially on cloudy days, providing the greenhouse can be watered before noon? This applies to general greenhouse stock, bedding plants, carnations, etc. R. B.

This is a question quite out of the common, but one that deals with the very essence of greenhouse management. The writer has had occasion to say before that operations in a greenhouse consisted of two divisions of work, the mechanical and the mental. If there is none that is purely mental, then it is manual with a large percentage of the mental. Potting and shifting plants, tying, and transplanting from the greenhouse to the garden, these are the mechanical duties of a greenhouse workman. The mental are watering, syringing and ventilation. It is not how to give ventilation, or how to water. It is when to do these important operations. To answer your question, I will say, that at 7 a. m. in midwinter it would be scarcely light enough to see clearly what plants needed water and those that did not, especially in dark, cloudy weather. There is no need of beginning so early.

As the season advances and the sun rises earlier and shines stronger, then if you see in the eastern horizon that Old Sol is going to rise in all his glory and it's going to be a bright, sunny day, then watering and syringing can be begun as early as you like.

You have not said that you alluded to midwinter, but from climatic conditions outside I infer your question was for that season. Your query reads, "Is it feasible?" I think you meant to say, "Is it advisable to water in the morning, say 7 a. m.?" to which I say emphatically, No! Leave the watering until 9 a. m., until you can tell more readily what the succeeding hours will bring forth.

To be reminiscent, once more, of my own effusions, we have said that waterers are, like poets, born, not made. For that matter, it would be nearer the truth if the word gardeners were substituted in place of waterers.

Broadly, here are some good rules for this most important of all greenhouse operations: From October 1 to April 1 we water always in the forenoon, and on dull, rainy days no watering is done in any house which is kept below 55 degrees. In a house where a high temperature is kept this is of less consequence, because the heat from the pipes will dry up the moisture on the foliage. From early April to the end of September, providing you have a little fire heat and ventilation, you can water in the afternoon. I trust these dates will not be understood as arbitrary. April may be cold and cloudy or bright and warm, and there is where you may exercise your own brains, and, depend upon it, if you don't possess in your own right that essential gray matter you cannot buy or borrow the stuff, and no college in the land can improve its quality or add to its weight one particle. The only method to improve your thinking apparatus is to exercise it, the same as muscle is improved.

In the winter, with a lower temperature and the sun obscured, there is little evaporation from the foliage of plants and less water at the roots is needed. With our soft-wooded plants, and even with our more important plants, like roses, carnations, violets and chrysanthemums, no good grower would like to see them go to rest for the night with the foliage wet. So never water in any house unless you are sure there is time for the moisture to dry up by evaporation before night. There may be some exceptions with a few plants, but so few they are not worth mentioning.

In looking around a large range of rose houses a few days ago I questioned with the proprietor the wisdom of syringing on dull days and added that I knew some successful growers who would not syringe for a week, preferring to wait for a bright day. My host replied: "I like to syringe. If it is dull, then I put on a little more steam to dry the foliage and lower it again when I see it is dry." This is all in the line of reason and logic.

There is a great difference in the condition of atmosphere relished by the native plants of Borneo or Java and those of temperate America and Europe, but that is another story. You will find a chapter on watering in "The Florists' Manual" which is better than the above. The writer has not improved by practice since that chapter was penned. W. S.

ASPARAGUS SPRENGERI.

Should the seed of Asparagus Sprengeri be removed from its red shell when gathered? How is the seed best sown, in small lots, and how long does it take to germinate? C. B.

It makes no difference whether the seed is what seedsmen call cleaned or sown with the red, fleshy covering. For several reasons it is always cleaned when handled by seedsmen, but if you have saved your own crop you need not go to the trouble of cleaning the seed. Sow in flats two inches or three inches deep, on a smooth surface and keep the seeds from touching when you scatter them on the surface. Sift on enough soil to just cover the seeds out of sight. Fresh seeds should be up in seven or eight weeks. Some growers soak the seeds of asparagus for twenty-four hours, but in your case there will be no need of that.

W. S.

CARNATION RUST.

I enclose samples of foliage of my Harlowarden and Lawson carnations. Will you tell me what is the trouble and the remedy? W. H. F.

Your carnations are affected with the common carnation rust, which I have prescribed for repeatedly in my answers to inquiries. The main cause of this trouble is too much moisture on the foliage. If you keep the plants dry it will not trouble you any. To get rid of it, pick off as much as you can and then dust your plants with dry-slaked lime and sulphur in equal portions, or you can use grape dust. All these have a drying effect and will tend to keep the spores of this disease inactive. Dispense with the syringing as much as you can for a time, but keep a sharp eye out for red spider. When you water, be careful to wet the soil only, and give air abundantly at every opportunity.

A. F. J. B.

NITRATE OF POTASH.

Will you tell me in what proportion to use potash for carnation beds? J. B.

When you say potash I presume you mean nitrate of potash. Use a good 3-inch potful to fifty gallons of water, which is plenty strong enough for this time of the year. During the dark days of midwinter feeding should be light, if indulged in at all, so go cautiously. When the days begin to lengthen you can give it to them without much danger. A. F. J. B.

CARNATIONS OUTDOORS.

What varieties of carnations would be best for growing outdoors? H. W.

There are a number of varieties which can be bloomed quite successfully during the latter part of the summer, if they are handled accordingly, though we have none that will produce heavy crops naturally during that time. To get best results you should get the cuttings into the sand at once, and if they were rooted now it would be even better. Shift along as rapidly as needed and top as often as the plants will stand it, the idea being to get as many breaks by planting-cut time as possible. If you can plant out of 3½-inch pots, plants that have been topped at least twice, you will be able to cut several blooms to the plant by August and several times as many during September and October. The Queen, Moonlight and Indiana Market are good whites for this purpose; Beatrice, Fair Maid, Enchantress in light pink; Wm. Scott, E. Crocker in bright pink. Rose-pink Enchantress cannot be used in this class as it comes light pink during hot weather. Use G. H. Crane for scarlet.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

Everything is in readiness for the meeting in Toronto, Ont., January 23 and 24, excepting the flowers for the exhibition, and the attendance.

The exhibition ought to be good and large, as the premiums offered are large and many of them. The flowers, as soon as they enter Canada, will have special care from the express company providing the society label is used. This label can be procured by applying to the secretary, and it will also pass them through the custom house without any delay or annoyance.

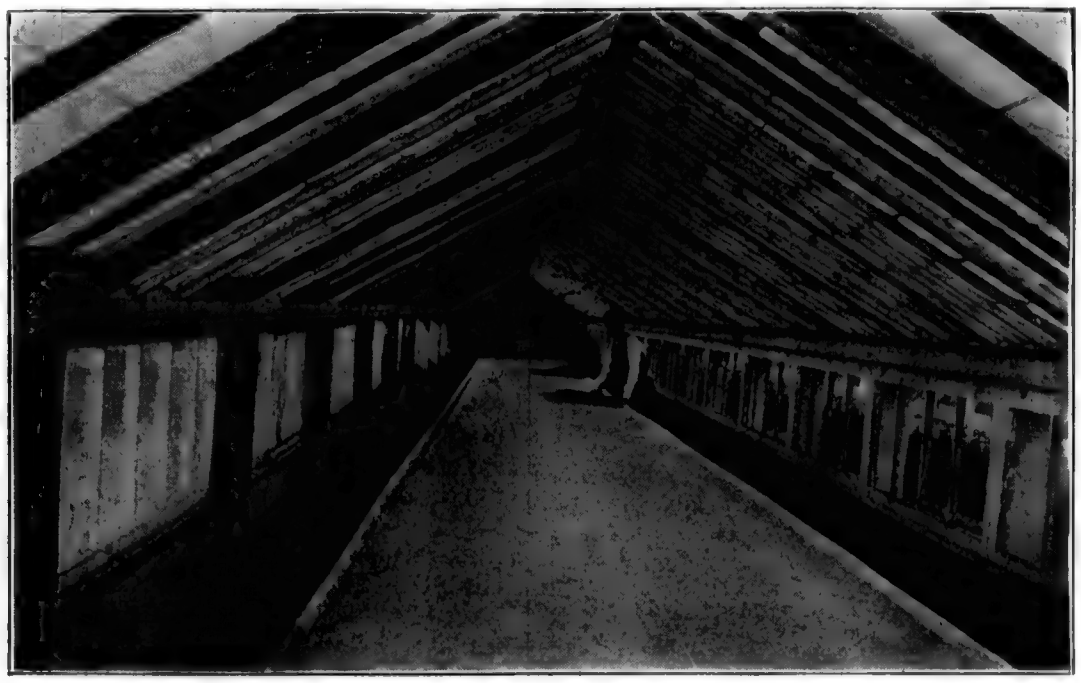
The attendance ought to be large, as the papers to be read and the discussions that will come up are unusually interesting. The one and one-third fare will apply to all of the country covered by the Central, Trunk Line, and the New England and Canadian Passenger Associations.

The premium list can be had by applying to the secretary, and in this connection he wants to publicly apologize to William Scott, of Buffalo, N. Y., for inserting the name of another party in place of his as judge. The list of judges should read W. N. Rudd, Mt. Greenwood, Ill.; William Nicholson, Framingham, Mass.; William Scott, Buffalo, N. Y.

January 16 is the last day for entries to reach the secretary. Intending exhibitors who have not yet joined the society will please note and apply for the premium list at once, so as to get entry blanks and information needed in time to get their entry in before January 16. Albert M. Herr, Sec'y.

The Toronto Convention.

The sixteenth annual meeting and exhibition of the American Carnation Society will be held in the City hall at Toronto, Ont., January 23 and 24. All arrangements have been made for one of the most successful meetings the society ever has had. Arrangements have been made whereby all exhibits bearing the society's label, obtainable from Secretary Herr, and addressed to E. F. Collins, Toronto, will be passed through the custom house without delay and without payment of duty. George H. Mills is to be superintendent of the exhibition. The judges are to be W. N. Rudd, William Nicholson and William Scott.



The general premiums are those of recent years. The special premiums include the society's gold, silver and bronze medals and the S. A. F. silver and bronze medals. A premium of $100, divided into three purses, is offered for the best display, fifty blooms to a vase and not to exceed twenty varieties. The Canadian Horticultural Association offers a silver cup worth $50 for the best six vases of fifty blooms each. The Steele-Briggs Seed Co. offers a silver cup worth $25 for six vases of twenty-five each. The Montreal Gardeners' and Florists' Club offers a cup worth $25 to the exhibitor making the largest display. The Dale Estate offers a silver cup valued at $25 for 100 blooms of any carnation to be disseminated in 1907. J. H. Dunlop offers $10 for fifty white carnations; W. Gammage, $10 for twenty-five blooms of any pink seedling; W. J. Lawrence, $10, for fifty blooms limited to growers with less than 20,000 feet of glass; J. H. Dunlop, $5 for twelve carnations from private gardeners; George Vair, $5 for twenty-five red. The King Construction Co. also offers a premium.

As features of the convention there will be essays as follows: "Are There Too Many New Carnations Introduced?" John Birnie, West Hoboken, N. J.; "Greenhouse Construction," Mr. King, Toronto; "American Carnations and Their Prospects in Europe," C. Engelmann and Peter Riise; "Carnations from a Canadian's Point of View," William Gammage, London, Ont.

Propagating House of Charles Dauernheim, Kimmswick, Mo.

A MISSOURI PLACE.

The accompanying illustrations are from photographs made a few weeks ago at the establishment of Charles Dauernheim, Jr., at Kimmswick, Mo., about twenty miles south of St. Louis, for which market Mr. Dauernheim grows carnations, and nothing but carnations. He is located on the Mississippi river, where soil conditions are good, and produces excellent stock. One picture shows the east end of the range and the other shows the interior of the new propagating house, just completed, with its brick-bottomed bench filled for the reception of the first batch of 60,000 cuttings.

Mr. Dauernheim is one of the progressive growers of the St. Louis district and his standard sorts include all the latest varieties, his list being possibly larger than it otherwise would be from the fact that he does quite a large business in rooted cuttings. His whites include Bountiful, White Perfection, Vesper, Boston Market, Fred Burki and the old stand-by, Flora Hill. In pink he grows Lawson, Joost and Eclipse, with, of course, Enchantress for light, and his list of reds is relatively longer, for he has Crane, Estelle, Flamingo and Cardinal. He is one of the growers who still finds a profit in Prosperity.

Some of the new sorts are on trial with Mr. Dauernheim. Aristocrat shows up well, fine growth, and in his opinion beats all the pinks. Bonnie Maid and Red Warrior, the Dorner pair, are also doing notably well.

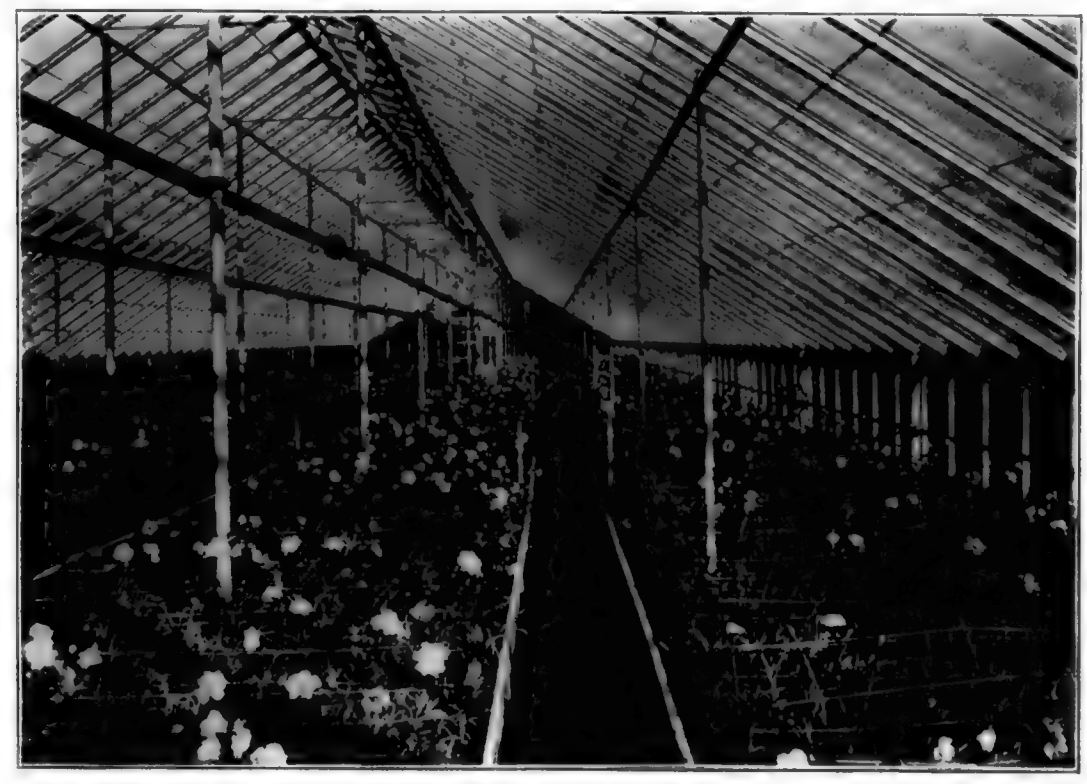
STEUBENVILLE, O.—S. S. Hill is confined to his home by a severe attack of erysipelas.

CONSOLIDATION.

Everybody knows Robert Crawford, Jr., of Philadelphia, and admires his beautiful store, with its handsome mirrors, rugs and furniture that give an elegance suggestive of taste and refinement, further enhanced by the specimen palms in jardinieres that harmonize with their surroundings, and great bunches of cut flowers in tall vases that always add brightness to the general effect.

Everybody also knows that Robert Crawford, Jr., is the owner of the Philadelphia Carnation Co.'s plant at Secane, in Delaware county, but everybody does not know that these two successful business enterprises have now been merged into one, and that both the store and the greenhouses will henceforth be conducted under one name, that of Robert Crawford, Jr., with one son, W. W. Crawford, as first lieutenant at 233 South Eleventh street, and the other son, Harry Crawford, as first lieutenant at Secane.

The success of Robert Crawford, Jr., as a retail florist is of many years' standing. His taste, reliability and industry have secured him a large following. When to this is added the fact that Mr. Crawford is thoroughly familiar with the purchasing power of a dollar under diverse conditions, his success as a retailer is easily understood.



As a grower, however, Mr. Crawford's position was not until recently so secure. His early training had given rudimentary knowledge. He thoroughly understood the care of plants in the conservatory attached to his store, and in the house, but whether the pennies so freely to be invested in glass houses could be induced to return when crops were harvested was quite another matter. Of course it ought to pay, but so many growers missed crops, got diseases in their houses, and so on, resulting in belated or poor flowers and plants, or no flowers or plants at all, that it was not until last spring that Mr. Crawford decided that he could make greenhouses pay and acted accordingly. Result, two new houses at Secane.

One is filled with four beds of Asparagus plumosus, now yielding heavily, and two beds filled with pots of Queen Alexandra daisies, the pots plunged in the soil. These plants are in fine condition. They are highly prized for decorating. This house is 30x102 feet. The second new house is nearing completion. It is to be used for stock plants. The carnation range is 66x204 feet and contains 14,000 plants of medium size in excellent condition. Mrs. F. Joost, Fair Maid, Enchantress and Queen Louise are the bread and butter varieties, while Harry Fenn, Roosevelt, Prosperity, Fragrance, Lieut. Peary and Robert Craig form the list of fancies grown in smaller quantities. Under the gutter are a fine lot of calla lilies in pots just coming into bloom.

A fine house of sweet peas contains bright pink that should be in bloom for the holidays, plants now three feet high and showing bud. The pale pink and white varieties are not so far advanced.

The mushroom house of sixteen beds is doing great work this season, the yield being good and prices high, owing to the failure of crops in some localities, so that the profit has been very satisfactory.

Mr. O'Mara's Comment.

On page 305 of the issue for December 13 one of your correspondents states that "none of the poinsettias is white." That is a mistake; there is a white form but it is rarely heard of now. It never attracted much attention. There is also a double form which is equally obscure.

On page 248 Brother Scott makes the statement that The Bride rose is a sport from Bridesmaid. I think he is mistaken. It originated with the late James Taplin, at Maywood, N. J., as a sport from Catherine Mermet.

PATRICK O'MARA.

White Poinsettias.

All poinsettias are euphorbias, but all euphorbias are not poinsettias by any means. Yes, there are white poinsettias; exact counterparts of the red except in color. The white color is somewhat creamy. Between twenty and thirty or more years ago white ones were a good deal grown in private gardens, more as a variety than for effect, however, for they have nothing of the decorative and striking value of the scarlet poinsettia. I have seen them in bloom in gardens in southern California, where, in company with the scarlet form, they are as hardy, vigorous and thrifty. My dear old friend, Dr. Franceschi, of Santa Barbara, can put you on the track of them. In southern Florida I have also seen them as open-air garden plants. Here try the Reasoner Bros., Oneco, Fla. But if I remember aright the biggest masses of them I ever saw in bloom were in the West Indies, in the Hope Botanical Gardens, Jamaica. Indeed, so fine were they in these gardens that I procured a lot of cuttings from the superintendent to bring home with me to the Phipps Conservatories.

For outdoor planting, however, the "double-flowered" scarlet form completely eclipses the single one. It is the latter that is usually grown in our greenhouses. The double is as easy to grow and as vigorous and floriferous as the other and vastly more vivid and showy, and it lasts in bloom much longer. A great bank of poinsettias, eight or ten feet high and in full bloom in the open air in the tropics, is the most brilliant floral effect on earth. Bougainvilleas may run up twenty feet, one solid mass of bloom for many yards, striking in the extreme, but it lacks the fire of the poinsettia.

The Market.

Conditions are about as reported a week ago, there being little overplus of anything. The usual holding back for Christmas is now in full progress. Roses are stiffening and few are obtainable, even on short stems, below $4 per hundred. Brides and Maids are none too plentiful at present. Chatenay and Wellesley are good, while some nice Killarney, Mrs. Oliver Ames and Mrs. Morgan are seen. Killarney still remains popular. Richmond is extra fine, although some good Liberty also are seen. Beauties of the best grades are marked up to $60 and will be higher later in the week.

Carnations vary from $2.50 to $6. These promise to be in heavy demand for Christmas and colored sorts will bring fancy prices. Violets are no more than enough for the demand, but we expect a liberal showing for the holidays. Prices are about the same on these. A fair supply of chrysanthemums still arrive, Eaton being most abundant. Paper Whites and Roman hyacinths are in good supply and rather more Lilium Harrisii and callas are coming in. Poinsettias are bringing up to $6 per dozen bracts. Marguerites, both yellow and white, sell extremely well, averaging $1.50 per hundred and will bring much higher prices later in the week. There is a fair supply of bouvardia, mignonette, antirrhinum and lily of the valley. A stronger call is noted for Asparagus plumosus nanus. Other green stock remains about the same.

In pot plants Firefly azalea is again much in evidence and sells better than the larger-flowered sorts. Ardisias, solanums, cyclamens, primulas, poinsettias, Cypripedium insigne and a variety of other flowering plants are seen.

Club Meeting.

The attendance at the closing meeting of the year on December 18 was again a splendid one and brim full of enthusiasm. W. H. Wyman's interesting paper on "Craft and the Craftsman" was well received and freely discussed. It was announced that the landscape classes were successfully under way with an enrollment of about sixty. Twelve new members were voted in. The secretary gave some statistics as to attendance and applications received during the year. Average attendance 120, compared with eighty-five in 1905. Total number of new members received in the year 125. Some discussion arose over an amendment to the by-laws relative to the nomination of officers from the floor instead of through a nominating committee, as at present. The amendment was moved by F. E. Palmer, but was not adopted.

Retiring President Wheeler gave notice that the January meeting will be ladies' night. The newly elected officers will be installed and J. K. M. L. Farquhar will give a stereopticon lecture on "Italian Gardens" as seen in Italy during his recent trip. Owing to the near approach of Christmas exhibits were hardly so numerous as usual, but some interesting things were shown. H. A. Stevens Co. showed splendid vases of variegated and light pink sports of Lawson and some seedlings. S. J. Goddard showed Princess of Wales violets and Downs had nice Lorraine begonias. The question box and refreshments occupied some time and the last meeting of 1906 proved one of the best in the club's history.

Various Notes.

F. W. Fletcher, of Auburndale, has had several tempting offers for his stock of Ficus altissima. This promises to be an excellent commercial plant and is much more graceful than the better known F. pandurata. It makes an excellent house plant.

William H. Elliott took a large party of growers and retailers to his Madbury, N. H., establishment December 13. Madbury is sixty-five miles from Boston. The visitors were loud in their praises of the roses seen, the Richmonds especially exciting their admiration. Boston was reached on the return trip about 7 o'clock after a most pleasant outing.

William Nicholson spent a few days in New York last week, looking up some of the leading carnation establishments. At Cottage Gardens, Alma Ward, Beacon, Victory and other sorts were found in grand condition. Dailledouze Bros. also had a splendid stock of carnations.

W. E. Doyle is showing a lot of beautifully flowered white Lorraine begonias in his Boylston street store.

The landscape gardening classes of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club started December 14 with an excellent attendance. Some sixty members are now enrolled.

Houghton & Clark are displaying some excellent Ficus pandurata at their store. Some good Lælia autumnalis were also noted.

H. M. Robinson & Co.'s salesrooms at 15 Province street are a busy hive of industry at present. Immense quantities of wreathing and greenery of all sorts are being disposed of and much overtime is necessary to cope with the increasing volume of business. Their cut flower trade shows a steady increase, shipments going to some of the most distant points in New England.

Horrigan, of East Foxboro, is handling large quantities of cut yellow marguerites of fine quality, in the culture of which he is a specialist. William Nicholson is also a successful cultivator of these.

H. H. Barrows & Son are having great sales for their Nephrolepis Whitmani and a heavy demand for the other varieties of nephrolepis they grow.

A successful and interesting children's garden conference was held at Horticultural hall December 15. There were addresses by the Hon. George H. Martin on "The Educational Value of School Gardens;" "Horticultural Education for School Teachers," by Prof. F. A. Waugh; "The School Garden in Normal Schools," by W. A. Baldwin, and "Children's Gardens and the Public," by Frank M. Marsh. There were interesting discussions on these papers. Photographs showing children's garden work, etc., were on exhibition and the prize list for 1907 was announced.

December has proven the coldest with two exceptions we have had for thirty-three years, but as we had a considerable excess of mean temperature up to December 1 we can stand slightly more frigid conditions.

CHICAGO CLUB OFFICERS.

Last year the retailers had their inning in the management of the Chicago Florists' Club, the president and the financial secretary being both retailers. This year the president, H. N. Bruns, is grower and retailer, but the other officers, aside from treasurer, are the wholesalers, whose portraits are presented herewith.

The vice-president of the club is Leonard Kill, who is known far and wide as the representative of Peter Reinberg in the selling end of his business. Mr. Kill is young in years but old in experience, having started in Mr. Reinberg's wholesale house before it was nearly as much of a factor in the market as it has since become. He is thoroughly conversant with all features of the trade and his personal popularity makes him an excellent officer for the club.

The recording secretary is Philip C. Schupp, who is the manager of the selling end of the business of the J. A. Budlong Estate. As was the case with Mr. Kill, Mr. Schupp married into the trade. Mrs. Kill and Mrs. Peter Reinberg are sisters. Mrs. Schupp is the daughter of J. A. Budlong. Mr. Schupp's training was in the mercantile line, and when he assumed the management of Mr. Budlong's wholesale store he brought to it a knowledge of business methods that has been invaluable in the development of the business, for too often florists suffer through lack of system. No better selection could be made for the secretaryship of the club, for Mr. Schupp may be relied upon as sure to have the details well in hand, with a place for everything and everything in its place.

The newly elected financial secretary is E. C. Amling, who is regularly called upon to handle the funds whenever any community undertaking is in hand. He is the only commission man represented in the club's official roster. He began as a grower, being for some time in partnership with his brother, A. F. Amling, at Maywood, but has now been eleven years in the wholesale cut flower business, developing from a very small start to a business which is a considerable factor in this market, through the application of conservative methods. He has a reputation as a good collector, which will be of value to the club.

The treasurer is Edgar Sanders, who has held the office these many years, the last several of them in spite of his protests that he is ready to relinquish the office in favor of some younger man.

The REVIEW published the portrait of President Bruns and a brief sketch of his career in the Annual Autumn Number. Under Mr. Bruns' leadership the club promises to take a new lease of life. At the inauguration last meeting night Mr. Bruns set forth some of the things he purposes to do. Possibly most important of all, he declares that he will call the meeting to order at 8 p. m. sharp so long as that is the hour specified in the by-laws. If there is no quorum present by 8:15 he declares there shall be no further waiting.

FORT EDWARD, N. Y.—Walter L. Mead has just completed a greenhouse 20x100 feet. Leroy Fleming, formerly of Glens Falls, N. Y., is manager.

DANVILLE, ILL.—During the heavy rain December 5 the boiler pits at the Smith greenhouses on North Vermilion street, in Roselawn, filled with water, putting out the fires at midnight. Pumps were put into operation, but fires could not be started until noon, and for a time it looked as though there would be serious damage.

NEW YORK.

Christmas Prospects.

The prospects for a grand Christmas trade are bright. Everybody is expecting it and planning accordingly. Even Dame Nature has taken a hand, and by making shipments of roses less than the market readily absorbs has made it impossible for any great rise before the holidays and is giving promise of an abundance for Christmas at reasonable figures. I think the pickling menace grows less and less every year. No reputable grower indulges in it. He can't without being found out. It is becoming commendable nowadays to send the complete output of the greenhouses daily. The man who fails to do so soon gets a bad name. Before long no wholesaler will handle stock over twenty-four hours old. We look for no great advance, therefore, in the quoted prices of the present week. Beauties may go to $1 each, Maids and Brides to $25 per hundred for the best. The quality generally gives no cause for fault-finding. It is superb.

There were never finer carnations shipped than those now coming to New York. All the fancy stock and the novelties sell out clean and at good figures. There will be quite a few mums for the holidays. Gardenias are rising and in constant demand. Orchids, too, grow constantly in favor. The demand for all the varieties listed by McManus is beyond the possible supply. The call from other cities has developed into a steady demand that will take considerable hustling to satisfy. The outlook for the orchid grower is bright. We have many of them in this vicinity.

There will be plenty of valley, narcissi and hyacinths for Christmas. Lilies are not abundant; $15 per hundred will doubtless be the asking price for the holidays. Violets will sell at $1. Few were worth that during the last ten days. It is possible the specials may touch $1.50 next Saturday.

The retailers are all counting on a big plant sale and are already making up their baskets of assorted foliage and blooming stock in great abundance. Azaleas, orange trees, dracænas, fancy varieties of ferns and heather seem to be the favorite combinations.

Various Notes.

Weiss & Pfannebecker, at One Hundred and Fifteenth street and Second avenue, have sold their store to Ditzenberger, of Eighty-eighth street and Lexington avenue. The location is a good one. The old firm intend making a trip to Germany and Switzerland, the birthplace of its members.

J. B. Nugent decorated the New York Athletic Club, of which he is a member, and the Union League Club elaborately last week.

Hanft Bros. are already making preparations for the Arion ball early in the year, and the Mallons, of Brooklyn, the Emerald ball in February, as usual.

Myer had a brilliant Christmas bell window last week that attracted much attention.

Bloomingdale Bros.' retail department is kept up to date and its windows adorned with novelties with Mr. Wade in charge, while Mr. Burnham has the big conservatories crowded with everything in plant and flower that can draw and satisfy the big clientele he controls.

Warendorff, at Madison and Fifty-ninth streets, had some unique funeral work last week in easel and pall construction. Quite out of the ordinary. The Russian artist here is original and has just returned from a year's experience in California.

Henry Hession, at Madison avenue and Seventy-sixth street, and Lena Hart, at Seventy-eighth street, have beautifully decorated stores. W. C. Mansfield, on Lexington avenue, and J. B. Nugent, Sr., also are demonstrating their ambition and faith in the Christmas trade by extensive stock and attractive windows.

J. H. Small & Son's big store is resplendent with electrical effects, begonias, baskets of varied combinations and grand specimen Whitmani and Elegantissima.

D. J. Mackintosh has baskets in endless quantity and variety. Mr. Mackintosh, Sr., has just returned from a long visit in Ireland and Scotland.

At Thorley's new Broadway store magnificent vases of Beauties and bougainvillea were the decoration.

Thomas Young, Jr., has three big retail centers filled with the choicest of everything that makes Christmas worth while floriculturally. He had charge of the big Humphrey church and house wedding Saturday, one of the events of the season, also the Bacon wedding on Thursday, another elaborate affair.

M. Bowe, in the heart of the city, has added some noted artists to his force for the holidays and his beautiful store is all too small for the big transient trade that comes to his mill, while his family engagements keep him busy at dinners and weddings most of the time. He is "Ready for a record Christmas," he says, and that is about what everybody expects this year.

A. L. Young & Co. have a fine stock of geraniums and poinsettias in pots for Christmas.

T. L. Moore, of Moore, Hentz & Nash, is visiting his growers in Rhode Island.

T. Mellstrom, of Sander & Son, sailed for England Saturday to spend Christmas with his family.

The auctions are over. Last Thursday Mr. Elliott decided to give his mellifluous voice a rest. He has had a successful season.

W. C. Krick is overwhelmed with orders for letters this year, and his patented Christmas tree holder is also in great demand.

Arthur T. Boddington reports a great demand for gladioli, especially the Shakespeare, May and America varieties. Harry Bunyard is expected back from a very successful trip for the holidays.

John J. Foley has sold his greenhouses at Madison and is giving all his attention to his big retail store on the Bowery and to the construction of his new album of floral photographs.

F. W. O. Schmitz, of Prince Bay, has disposed of an immense number of evergreens as well as Azalea Indica. This has been the largest year in his history.

The Lord & Burnham Co. is still as busy as if the season were at its zenith instead of waning.

Hitchings & Co. are enjoying a goodly share of the general prosperity and when their immense works at Elizabethport are completed they will have all the conveniences needed to considerably increase their output.

Anton Schultheis has a grand display of Christmas plants, but they all will be disseminated by Saturday. New York and Brooklyn take most of them.

Bobbink & Atkins, of Rutherford, have a great stock of azaleas in bloom for Christmas.

Andrew Wilson, of Summit, was in the city last week in the interests of his scale-killing plant oil. The sale of it is already making a larger force and greater conveniences for its manufacture a necessity.

The orchid men are all busy importing, building and shipping. Julius Roehrs Co., Lager & Hurrell, Carrillo & Baldwin, A. Held and Siebrecht & Son are all doing their share to make possible the supplying of the unusual demand that has developed from every part of the country.

F. R. Pierson Co. have sent out some grand specimens of Elegantissima for the Christmas decorations. Winsor is coming to the market from the big houses at Scarboro and is very popular.

O. V. Zangen, the seedsman of Hoboken, reports his biggest year.

Reed & Keller report big business for Christmas.

H. Frank Darrow is back from the west after a very successful trip.

John Lewis Childs, of Floral Park, has sold all the great stock of Phoenix Roebelenii he offered the trade earlier in the year, with the exception of the seedlings.

Sheridan's Beauties, as usual, will be a feature on Twenty-eighth street for Christmas, and Saltford's violets on Twenty-ninth street, from his own greenhouses, demonstrate he knows "how to grow" them. All the wholesale houses are optimistic as to the holiday trade and making more extensive preparation than usual for it.

New York Defeats Madison.

The following account of what the New York seedsmen did to the Madison gardeners is contributed:

"We snowed them under. Herrington had a hunch on what was coming, so wisely stayed out of the game. The Madisons had hopes the first few frames, but when they saw their big chief, Duckham, miss a few they seemed to lose heart and it was like taking candy from babies after that. Three straight and over 100 pins each game. Wasn't it awful! These were the deciding games of the series, New York having won five out of the nine. However, the Madisons took it good-naturedly and showed the visitors a royal good time. Billy Rickards' bowling, the Mule Team singing, and Bobby's rooting were the features.'' The score follows:

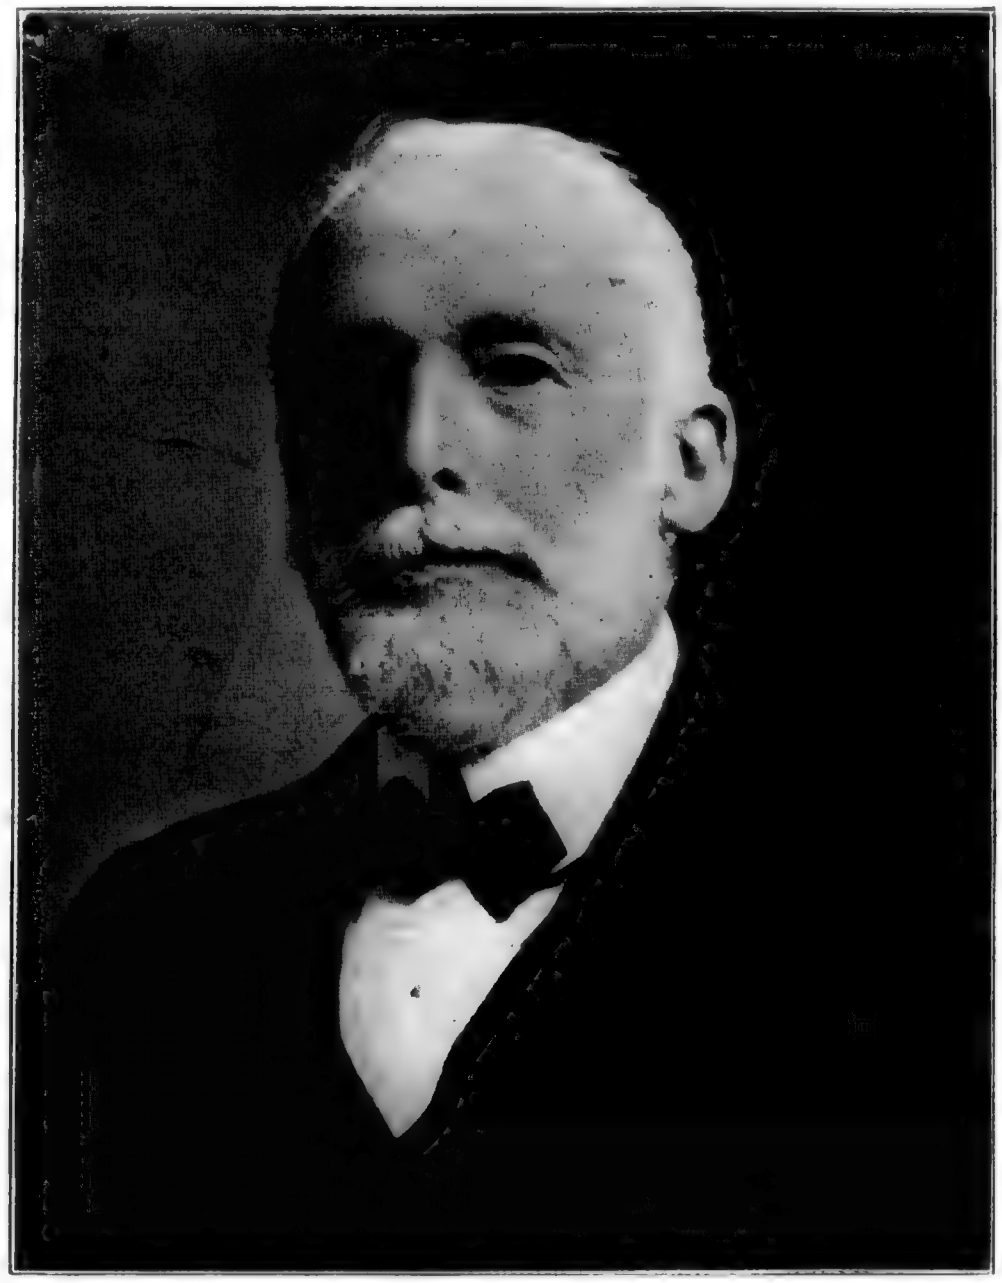
OBITUARY.

Alfred F. Conard.



Another of the grand old men of horticulture is gone. The announcement is made of the death of Alfred F. Conard, president of the Conard & Jones Co., of West Grove, Pa., a town for its size probably better known to the general public than any other in America, largely because of Mr. Conard's establishing there a mail-order plant business which now extends not only to every part of the United States but to every civilized country in the world. Since 1869 Mr. Conard and Antoine Wintzer have been associated in this business, devoting their attention largely to roses, for which the house is probably best known, although it is only one of a number of specialties. Mr. Wintzer is one of the most expert rose propagators in America, but is also regarded as an authority on the canna. In both departments they have been responsible for the introduction of a number of the best varieties now in the trade. Mr. Conard has been the business spirit back of the house in all these years of development. The present firm was organized and incorporated in 1897 with Mr. Conard president, Mr. Wintzer vice-president and superintendent, S. Morris Jones treasurer and Robert Pyle secretary. Since that date the increase in the trade and in the facilities for handling it have been more rapid than ever. The catalogue now carries a full line of stock for the retail mail trade and Mr. Conard often has said that never in his most enthusiastic moments did he, half a century ago, when he was laying the foundations of the business at West Grove, dream of such possibilities as have come with his later years.

On the morning of Saturday, December 15, Alfred F. Conard, aged 71 years, was found dead in bed at his home, in West Grove, Pa. He was the senior member of the Conard & Jones Co., and has long been prominent in that section of the county, in addition to being one of the most widely known rose growers in the United States.

For some time Mr. Conard had been in rather poor health and a week ago was ill as the result of a stroke of apoplexy, but grew better, and two days before his death was at his office.

Mr. Conard was a descendant of Dennis Conard, a German, who settled at Germantown, a suburb of Philadelphia, in 1683. Alfred was a son of Thomas and Rebecca Shoemaker Conard, and obtained his education in his father's school, at West Grove, and the Westtown Boarding School. Subsequently he settled at West Grove, where he learned the nursery business under the personal supervision of Thomas W. Harvey. After acquiring a thorough knowledge of his vocation Mr. Conard entered into a partnership with Charles Dingee, under the firm name of Dingee & Conard. Mr. Conard was largely instrumental in organizing its mail-order business, which extends all over the United States, and established a national reputation for West Grove. A number of years ago Alfred Conard retired from the Dingee & Conard Co. and established a new business at West Grove, in the same line, under the title of the Conard & Jones Co. Mr. Conard has been a director in the National Bank of West Grove, and was connected with several organizations concerning plant culture.

In 1862 he married Lydia Hughes, daughter of Samuel Hughes and sister of Mark Hughes, West Grove, and Mrs. Edward Savery, West Chester. Mrs. Conard survives him. He leaves no children. One brother, Pennington Conard, resides at Lansdowne. Mr. Conard was a member of Orthodox Friends Meeting, and during his life attended regularly. The funeral was held at Old West Grove Meeting House December 18, a special train being run from Philadelphia, as so many desired to attend.

Alfred F. Conard.

Albert Woltemate.

Albert Woltemate, one of the oldest and best known florists of Philadelphia, died suddenly of heart failure while going to his greenhouses last Monday morning, December 17. Mr. Woltemate had carried on a general florist's and landscape gardening business on Germantown avenue, near Queen Lane, all his life. The business, which had been carried on by his father, and later by his brother William and himself, is one of the most extensive in Germantown. The lot extends all the way from Germantown avenue back to Green street. On the front is an immense store; behind it a dozen or more greenhouses devoted to raising foliage, flowering and bedding plants, which are sold at wholesale as well as at retail. Mr. Woltemate was a tremendous worker, with abilities adapted to almost every requirement of his business. He was essentially a florist of the old school, capable of arranging a decoration, making up a design, growing plants, grading a lawn, or building a wall, with equal facility. He loved his work dearly and was never happier than when engaged in some difficult task. His untiring energy made almost possible the herculean labor of growing plants and flowers in the heart of a busy town. For some varieties of plants, such as gloxinias, tuberous-rooted begonias, and hydrangeas, he was a regular source of supply to many of Philadelphia's leading retailers. Mr. Woltemate was an enthusiastic member of the Germantown Horticultural Society, of which he was a vice-president for many years. He is survived by a widow, and by one brother, Henry C. Woltemate, whose greenhouses are on Mt. Airy avenue, near the Philadelphia & Reading railway. PHIL.

SATURDAY is the shortest day in the year.

WHEN the days begin to lengthen the cold begins to strengthen.

EVERY year the propagating of carnations and the purchase and sale of cuttings is beginning a little earlier than it did the year before.

THE Proceedings of the Society of American Florists, being a stenographic report of the Dayton convention, lists of members, etc., has been issued and mailed to members.

NOTICE.

To Advertisers and Correspondents.

Advertisers and correspondents are asked to note that both Christmas and New Year's fall on Tuesday, the busiest day in the office of the REVIEW. It will be necessary that copy for the issues of December 27 and January 3 be placed in our hands one day earlier than usual.

GLASS AND THE TARIFF.

The printed report of the proceedings of the twenty-second annual convention of the Society of American Florists, held at Dayton, Ohio, last August, is now out, and for the benefit of those who were not present at the meeting, they will find on pages 78 to 85 the action which was taken upon the discussion of President Kasting's address relative to the cost of glass for greenhouse work.

It will be noticed in that report that it was suggested that the first step for practical results would be to find, from the committee of ways and means, what was likely to come up.

The Hon. Butler Ames, one of the Massachusetts congressmen, stands as a leader and member in favor of tariff revision, and in reply to a letter addressed to him, as to what action would be likely to be taken upon revision by those who favored such a course, he makes his reply as follows:

House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C., Dec. 8, 1906.

Benjamin Hammond,
Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y.

Dear Sir: Congressman Ames wished me to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 6th instant with its enclosures in reference to the proposed revision of the tariff, and to say in reply that this matter has not yet reached a point where the majority of this congress have indicated that they are favorable to a revision.

Yours respectfully,
J. A. Legare,
Private Secretary.

It will thus be seen from the letter received from the chairman of the committee of ways and means of the house of representatives, already published, and the letter above, shows that there is no expectation of any real work being done at the present session of congress. What may develop during the winter, which will lead up to an extra session next year, remains yet to be seen, but there is no doubt but what if the florists as a body will stand together, that their collective influence would have much weight. BENJAMIN HAMMOND.

CONGRESS OF HORTICULTURE.

One who would safely navigate the ocean finds it essential to occasionally make observations to establish his exact location. He may have kept a record of the ship's course, know to a nicety the force of the wind and the ocean currents, the number of revolutions of the propeller, and be able to tell just where the ship ought to be, but experience has taught that in addition to this he must, by observations, ascertain just where it is. In like manner those who assay to explore the ocean of the unknown should occasionally make observations and comparisons to ascertain just where they are.

We can learn something of this through a mere physical exhibition of what has been and can be accomplished, but it is far more important that we come to an exact knowledge of the laws through which and by which the results are obtained. This can only come through a conference between those who are studying these laws, for what seems to be the truth to one under a certain set of conditions, the experience of another under other conditions may show it to be only a seeming truth. It is well then for all those who are engaged in any particular line of study to meet occasionally for council, that they may ascertain how much of what we think we know is actually so, to ascertain just how far we are in our voyage into the unknown.

To this end the National Council of Horticulture has thought it wise to call for the meeting of a congress of the horticulturists of the world to assemble at Jamestown, Va., during the latter part of the exhibition to be held there in 1907, to commemorate the four hundredth anniversary of the first permanent English settlement in what is now the United States. The exact date of the meeting and the formal program has not been decided upon, but will be announced later. But in the meantime we ask that all interested in progressive horticulture plan to attend the congress and communicate with H. C. Irish, Missouri Botanic Garden, St. Louis, Mo., U. S. A., as to what definite subjects should be discussed. W. W. TRACY.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS

Department of Plant Registration.

Central Park Nursery, Topeka, Kan., submits for registration Canna Magnificent; foliage green; bloom rich scarlet of extraordinary size; height four feet.

Appointment of Director.

Secretary-elect P. J. Hauswirth has tendered to President Kasting his resignation as a director of the Society of American Florists and same has been accepted. President Kasting has appointed Theodore Wirth, of Minneapolis, to serve as a director for Mr. Hauswirth's unexpired term of two years.

WM. J. STEWART, Sec'y.

SOUTHERN FLORISTS.

The Society of Southern Florists was organized at Chattanooga, Tenn., May 22, 1906. The purpose of the organization is mutual business and social benefits to members and the improving and enlarging of trade conditions in southern territory.

Forty-six charter members were enrolled, officers elected, a liberal and practical constitution adopted and arrangements made for holding a convention of florists at New Orleans in the near future.

The constitution admits to membership professional and amateur florists, horticulturists, seedsmen, dealers in supplies and implements incidental to the trade and others having allied interests.

There is so much in prospect for the betterment of floricultural and horticultural conditions in the south— a section especially adapted to these operations— through organization, that an earnest appeal is made to all who are directly or indirectly interested to lend a hand in extending encouragement and substantial support by promptly sending in to the undersigned, or directly to the treasurer, Jos. Steckler, New Orleans, their application for membership and the modest sum of $1, which the constitution requires as annual dues.

J. F. WILSON, Sec'y.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The week opened with excellent demand, both from out of town and locally. The receipts of stock were light and it was impossible to fill all orders on Monday, a condition which has prevailed more or less steadily in the days following. It is quite apparent that growers are holding back stock as much as is possible to accumulate a Christmas supply, for the only items which are in large receipt are such as stevia, Paper Whites, and the things for which there is no extra demand at Christmas. The wholesalers have had their own troubles to get anything like the quantities of roses and carnations they have need for, the growers refusing to cut any more than they have to, though the commission-men tell them that the stock will realize better prices now while in good condition than it will just before Christmas, when it has passed its best.

Good Bridesmaid roses are the shortest item in the market. A long stretch of cloudy weather has had the effect of taking out much of the color, and both Brides and Maids are soft.

It is reported that smilax will shortly stiffen materially in price.

Christmas Prospects.

The booking of advance orders for Christmas is heavier than in any recent year, and wholesalers are much in doubt as to what the outcome will be. In many cases they are booked up to anticipated receipts in many lines and are declining orders except for certain specialties or items not in large holiday demand. The confidence in large supplies for Christmas has been shaken by a week of steady, cloudy and often stormy weather. The wholesalers have been visiting their sources of supply to verify the reports of little stock in sight, and as a rule they find the grower's lugubrious predictions fully warranted by conditions. It is, nevertheless, the fact that on most occasions when great scarcity has been predicted exactly the opposite has been the condition on the day before the holiday. There is no question but what all good stock will go out Saturday and Sunday at prices fully up to the best ever realized in this market. But the grower who holds his cut beyond Sunday morning is likely to have cause for regret. Pickled stock will be worth little in any event. If you have anything in the vat, send it in at once.

Aside from the prospective shortage of carnations, the greatest scarcity will be of good Bridesmaid roses. There will be no greater number cut of other varieties, but the average quality will be better. There will be tremendous receipts of Hudson river violets. Several growers have large crops of lilies ready. Poinsettias promise to be abundant. There will be all the bulbous stock the market can use.

Bouquet green is proving not so short as early predictions indicated; there seems enough to go around at the price. Holly is abundant and most of it of fine quality.

The Commission Woman.

So far as records show, Miss Martha

C. Gunterberg is the only woman strictly commission-man in the United States. She does business at the Flower Growers' Market, handling the product of some half dozen growers on the usual commission basis. Miss Gunterberg is a bright young woman of experience in the trade, having been for some time with J. Bombenger on Sixty-fourth street. Her start in the commission business was with the stock of the Guardian Angel Orphan Asylum, but she soon took on other growers. She makes her own credits, supplies the capital to carry her customers and make weekly payment to growers, and does in all respects the regulation commission business.

There are several other women selling in the Growers' Market, and some of them handle goods on commission, but all are backed by the stock from their own family establishments.

Club Meeting.

There was a good attendance at the December meeting of the Florists' Club. The election of officers was the principal order of business. This should have taken place at the November meeting, which was postponed because of the flower show banquet. Because of the postponement, nomination, election and installation all were handled at one sitting. The election resulted as follows: President, H. N. Bruns; vice-president, Leonard Kill; treasurer, Edgar Sanders; recording secretary, P. C. Schupp; financial secretary, E. C. Amling; trustees, F. F. Benthey, C. H. Fisk, J. F. Klimmer, P. J. Hauswirth and George Asmus. The treasurer's report showed $291.43 in the general fund and $179.80 in the special fund, which looks like affluence. A report of flower show results was made. It showed the loss to have been smaller than had been anticipated.

Visitors were Harry Papworth, of New Orleans, and Harry Bunyard, New York.

Various Notes.

Carl N. Thomas, who has been farming at West Springfield, Pa., during the last summer, is again on deck at his old stand with the A. L. Randall Co., of which he formerly was secretary. He looks as though a summer outdoors had agreed with him.

P. J. Hauswirth plans to go to Boston about January 2 to take over the appurtenances of the office of the secretary of the Society of American Florists. Mr. Hauswirth does not hold all the offices devolving upon the Hauswirth family, his son Ed having recently been honored by election to a lieutenancy in the First Cavalry, Illinois National Guard.

The retailers have been busy looking up stock in the plant line for the holiday trade. They have discovered little in the way of novelty, but have found in several establishments well flowered azaleas, fine Lorraine begonias and some good oranges.

Walter Retzer, formerly in business in this city and later on the Pacific coast, is now with Mrs. M. M. Ayers, at St. Louis.

Jegen, on Madison street, has made an attractive use of the folding Christmas bells for his show window. The sides of the window are mirrors set at an acute angle with the glass. In front of these he has suspended small branches of trees and from each one has suspended perhaps twenty-five of the 2½-inch paper bells. The mirror doubles the number of bells for the person who looks at the display, and the effect of the shower of bells is excellent.

August Poehlmann says that the Poehlmann Bros. Co. will be in line with a big crop of Harrisii from Christmas on.

Sunday will be the big shipping day for the Christmas business. It is worth while remembering that there is only one chance to get mail, by going to the postoffice between 10:30 and 12:30. Buyers should bear this in mind.

The Chicago Rose Co. is doing a large business this week in greens and holly.

F. R. Hills, Maywood, Ill., has a nice lot of poinsettias, many of them grown in pans and just right for retail sales, not over fifteen inches high.

Robert Johnstone, of Vaughan & Sperry, resumed work Monday morning after a week under the doctor's care.

Emil Buettner is sending large quantities of fine Paper Whites to the A. L. Randall Co.

Frank Beu cut his last chrysanthemums December 17.

Leopold Koropp, of the Sheridan Park Floral Co., reports the world treating him particularly well in the last year, and he looks it.

W. L. Palinsky buried his mother December 12. She was 81 years of age. Her death was due to a fall from a couch some three weeks ago.

rose house of Albert Lies and the stock is looking fine.

Leonard Kill was on deck at Peter Reinberg's again Monday morning after a couple of days' illness. He reports being closely booked up on the Mrs. Field rose, the best stock at $6 per dozen. One retailer offered an order for 300 at that price, but could only be accommodated in part.

Kennicott Bros. Co. is receiving considerable quantities of chrysanthemums this week. Nonin is the principal variety.

All the supply houses are as busy as they can be. C. M. Dickinson at Hunt's says the season is considerably the best to date with them. The A. L. Randall Co. has all it can handle in the supply department, and E. F. Winterson Co. is rushed. They are making a specialty of artificial goods, also handling holly in quantity, but not making so much wreathing as usual.

N. J. Wietor says that he looks for the heavy demand for Beauties, good roses and carnations to hold better than usual through the week from Christmas to New Year's. He has many inquiries for stock for social functions around New Year's.

E. Francis, of Scheiden & Schoos, says he is in every way satisfied with the way business is progressing.

It is reported one retailer has placed an order for 30,000 violets for Sunday and Monday.

F. F. Benthey says the call for Killarney is something tremendous; had they anticipated it they would have planted it much more heavily.

Visitors.

Among the visitors in the last week were: E. H. Haentze, Fond du Lac, Wis.; H. A. Bunyard, New York, suffering from writer's cramp as the result of a trip among the gardeners at Lake Geneva; Harry Papworth, New Orleans; C. F. Rice, Minneapolis; Mrs. C. W. Pike, Racine, Wis.; Will Breitmeyer, Mt. Clemens, Mich.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The Christmas rush will be on this week and everything looks bright for good business, although it has been rather quiet for the last week in almost everything except funeral work. The advance sales of holiday greens are very satisfactory and the demand for holly is expected to exceed all previous years. Mistletoe is fine. Among the plants for Christmas which seem most in favor are cyclamens, azaleas, poinsettias and Lorraine begonias. These are fine, especially those from Jablonsky and Bentzen.

The cut flower market was dull Monday, not much stock coming in. Prices this week will be almost as high as the day before Christmas, so it would hardly pay for any of the shippers to hold stock back. Fancy grades in roses are up to $8 and $10 per hundred. There seem to be plenty of seconds. Beauties are scarce in all grades. Carnations, too, have shortened up considerably, with prices much higher on fancy stock.

California violets also are high in price; $2 per hundred will about be the rate for Christmas. Bulb stock will be plentiful. Prices will hardly go up on this stock. Stevia and a few callas and sweet peas will about make up what the market will contain during the holidays.

Club Meeting.

The last meeting of the year of the St. Louis Florists' Club took place December 13, President Irish occupying the chair, with twenty members present.

Chairman W. C. Smith, for the trustees, reported that they had engaged a new hall in the Burlington building, 810 Olive street, opposite the post-office. The club will hold its first meeting there January 10. In this hall no exhibitions can be given, so it was decided to hold our exhibition in some other hall and invite the public. E. G. Eggeling was elected to membership. The flower show committee made a favorable report and read the names of thirty-eight subscribers to the guarantee fund, who subscribed $2,500, and stated that by the January meeting the fund would reach $7,000. This report enthused the members present to work hard to accomplish the committee's desire to finish the fund not later than the February meeting. That the show is a go, goes without saying.

G. H. Pring, of the Missouri Botanic Garden, read an essay on "The Cultivation of Orchids," which was pleasing to the members. A. J. Bentzen led a discussion on growing cyclamen which was participated in by Messrs. Schray, Braun and Fillmore. Harry L. Goodman, a representative of the Union Stock Yards, Chicago, was present and gave a talk on pulverized sheep manure, which his company is selling in large lots to florists.

Horticultural Society.

The St. Louis Horticultural Society, which was organized lately, is out with a neat pamphlet stating the objects of the society with indorsements by Professor William Trelease, director of the Missouri Botanic Garden, Henry T. Kent, president of the Civic League, and F. W. Taylor, who was chief of horticulture at the world's fair. Patrons of the society are to pay $100; life members, $50; active members, $10, and regular members, $5 annually.

The society aims to give at least one creditable flower show each year; act as authority in horticultural questions; give instructive public lectures; issue bulletins on the care of plants in the house or conservatory and to erect and maintain a horticultural hall.

President Harry Young reports that the society is making good progress and hopes to accomplish its aims within a year's time. Most of its members are also members of the local Florists' Club, and both the society and the club can work in harmony for the good of our profession.

Various Notes.

Henry Johann, of Collinsville, Ill., and Harry L. Goodman, of Chicago, were visitors on Thursday of last week and attended the club meeting in the afternoon.

George Waldbart is stocked up with some extra fine blooming plants for the holidays, with a great many of them marked "Sold."

Walter Retzer has entered the employ of Mrs. M. M. Ayers, on Grand avenue. Mrs. Ayers reports business extra good.

Frank Ellis will after the first of the year have his business settled up and then will bid St. Louis good-bye, and leave for Panama to look after his interests there. His family will follow later.

Fred Foster and Alex. Siegel visited Chicago recently to buy stock for Christmas business.

John Steidle, of Central, missed his first club meeting this year. He must have been busy.

Henry Braun, who is foreman for Adolph Brix, is showing good results at the old Klockenkemper place. Mr. Brix's store on St. Louis avenue is filled with fine Christmas plants and cut stock. Mr. Brix has a good word for business.

Miss Schnell, of East St. Louis, has had a busy week in funeral work. She is a regular buyer in this market.

Kalisch & Sons, at Delmar and Taylor avenues, are making their usual fine holiday window decorations. Business is reported good in all lines.

The Ellison Floral Co. had the busiest week in years, with decorations, and required extra help.

J. F. Windt has his large show house on Bayard avenue looking fine and is ready for the holiday season.

The Bentzen Floral Co., on Grand avenue, is having fine success this year with Begonia Gloire de Lorraine and other blooming plants for holiday sales.

The Florists' Bowling Club will rest up from now until after the holidays. Beginning the first Monday night in the new year, Captain Lohrenz, of the retailers, and Captain Schriefer, of the wholesalers, expect their teams to roll regularly every Monday night.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

We are having the dull spell that always comes just before the holidays. There is little doing and there is scarcely any stock arriving. What little does come in is bought up about as soon as it is unpacked. Prices rule high and are not much below the Christmas quotations. Christmas prices will take effect about Friday and will be high this year. That flowers of all kinds are going to be scarce for the holidays there can scarcely be a doubt, for with the cloudy weather stock has not had a chance to bloom. Carnations cannot be otherwise than scarce, and roses are sure to be soft and the Maids off color. Of course there will be the general line of flowers grown especially for the holidays, but there will not be any more than enough to fill orders. We had a regular old-fashioned snowstorm Monday.

Various Notes.

Henry A. Konzelman, who was until recently with George & Allan, has started in the retail business in Walnut Hills, at 1602 Forest avenue.

Miss White, of Lexington, Ky., has been here buying stock for the holiday trade.

The members of the Florists' Society should not overlook the date of the next meeting, January 12. This will be the banner meeting of the year and every one who comes will be glad that he did not miss it. There will be a smoker and many other things that will be of interest. And, too, do not forget the ques-

Two wills of the late Michael Schmit, Sr., have been offered for probate. Schmit, who lived at 959 Churchill avenue, died on November 28, leaving an estate valued at $75 in personalty and $2,500 in real estate. December 5 his son, Michael Schmit, Jr., applied for appointment as executor of the estate, having filed a will made by his father on April 13, 1903, in which the entire estate was left to him. While the son was making application for appointment as executor, through Attorney Victor Abraham, Attorney Joseph Schroeder, who represents the widow and stepmother, came into the courtroom. Attorney Abraham suggested that the widow might waive service then and there, to which Attorney Schroeder answered that the son might do likewise, following up his statement by exhibiting a will dated September 20, 1906, in which the widow is left everything and is named as executrix, the son being cut off entirely. The two wills were then pinned together and filed for the hearing.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

Trade has not been heavy with any of the dealers. A few of them were favored with some nice orders for funeral work, but outside of that business was quiet. Considerable activity is displayed in decorating for Christmas and already some very pretty effects are noted.

Stocks are kept up well, notwithstanding the dull business. Roses are about as good as we have ever had. Carnations will be scarce. A visit to some of our leading carnation growers brings this situation in plain view. Miscellaneous stock is looking good and considerable will be cut Christmas. Blooming plants are plentiful. Every grower seems to have a full supply of good stock. Prices are high and it begins to look as though the retailer would be compelled to ask a big price in order to make much during the holiday trade.

Holly and green are selling well, but the commission houses have cut the trade up considerably.

St. Paul.

Alfred Lemke, of the new firm of Colberg & Lemke, was married a few days ago. He is the son of one of our oldest florists, E. F. Lemke.

Holm & Olson say trade has been quiet in flowers for social occasions, but the demand for funeral work was very good last week.

L. L. May & Co. have stocked up with a big line of Christmas novelties, in baskets, hampers, etc.

C. F. Vogt has made and ready for delivery some very fine holly wreaths. He is expert in turning out that class of work.

August Vogt reports a quiet week but a great many inquiries for Christmas stock.

E. F. Lemke is still cutting some fine mums and believes that he is going to Minneapolis.

Ralph Latham reports good business and anticipates a heavy Christmas trade on cut flowers, notwithstanding high prices.

John Monson, of the Minneapolis Floral Co., has a heavy stock of plants. His poinsettias and azaleas are especially fine. He has booked a large number of orders.

Amundson & Kirchener are doing satisfactory business. Funeral work was so heavy last Friday that they were compelled to work all night.

The New York Floral Co. complains of slow trade. FELIX.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

Business at this writing, just before the Christmas rush, is sufficient to consume most of the flowers that come into the market at good figures. The conditions are, however, somewhat chaotic. For instance, carnations of high grade advanced in price on Saturday, and on the same day some went to the street, an unusual thing now. American Beauty roses continue in excellent demand at advancing prices. The better tea roses are selling well, but some of the lower grades, together with Paper Whites, Romans and smilax, are accumulating. Bouvardia is advancing in price; pansies are selling well. Mrs. Jerome Jones has disappeared from the list of available chrysanthemums. Poinsettia is becoming more and more a factor, the stock being extremely fine.

Christmas Plants.

The tendency of late years has been for flowering rather than foliage plants at the holidays. While foliage plants are still bought to some exent, it is chiefly the bright-colored varieties, the staple green sorts retiring to the background at this festive season.

Among plants in flower the first place this Christmas must be awarded to the new azalea, Mme. Petrick, which is described as a Christmas Mme. Vander Cruyssen of lighter shade. The flowers are large and full, they develop well and evenly, and do not fall readily. Verveneana is also excellent. Apollo and Spitfire are good Christmas reds, the latter being the better of the two, but they are hardly up to market requirements. Deutsche Perle is nice, but white is not the right Christmas color, and the variety has some drawbacks at this season.

Poinsettia in all sizes, from the little fellows used in baskets, up to the tall decorative stock, are finer and evidently more popular than ever before. Great quantities of short plants with large heads are seen, reflecting credit on the growers. The pale pink form of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine is said to be gaining in popularity with the growers. Its advantage over its darker sister is not only a question of color, but the fact that the flowers dry on the plants instead of falling. Cyclamens are practically out of the market this season, there being really no plants up to the standard of former years. Otaheite oranges are finer than for many years; the disease which affected this beautiful dwarf fruit tree has seemingly been entirely overcome. While there are other beautiful flowering plants, the above list forms what may be termed the staples. For filling hampers, baskets and the popular birchbark arrangements they are combined with bright-hued foliage plants, such as marantas, dracænas, crotons and Pandanus Veitchii. Great quantities of small ferns are also used.

Thinly Guised.

Thomas Floyd entered the great seed warehouse of Micreer & Drechell and asked for Mr. Micreer. "Can't I wait on you?" the smiling manager asked

But Thomas was not to be put off. "I have private business with Mr. Micreer himself," he said, and he was straightway shown to the firm's private office. "Mr. Micreer," Thomas began, "my name is Thomas Floyd. I am gardener in charge of Mr. Rosepen's place on Meeting House lane. I ordered some bulbs from you. I asked you to send good bulbs and true (Mr. Floyd always writes these words on his bulb order). You sent me this knife." Here Mr. Floyd exhibited a knife which he had previously assured his friends was worth 5 or maybe 6 cents, no more. Mr. Micreer took in the situation at a glance. With rare tact he led his visitor to a showcase filled with the best knives. "They should not have sent you that child's plaything, Mr. Floyd," he said. "Do me the favor to choose your knife." But Thomas held back; "I did not ask for it, Mr. Micreer," he said. Then the great seedsman picked out a perfect beauty, blades of the best steel, presented it with his compliments and bowed his visitor to the door.

When describing this incident to a select circle of friends Mr. Floyd wound up his story by saying that "Mr. Micreer was a perfect gentleman."

Fred Brown, manager for J. J. Habermehl's Sons, at the Bellevue-Stratford recently made up a novel and very beautiful wreath. It was large, about two and a half feet in diameter, formed entirely of well-berried holly, ornamented with cotton blossoms, pure white, from two to three inches in diameter. "Where did he get them?" Oh, I nearly forgot that, from W. E. McKissick, who says he will have 5,000 for Christmas.

Answers to Correspondents.

Review readers are invited to send any questions relating to culture or marketing of plants and flowers in Philadelphia, to Phil, in care of any of the leading seed or commission houses. Each question will be submitted to a competent person and answered under number. Correct name and address must always accompany inquiry, but will not be published.

58. Is there any money in chrysanthemums grown for the Philadelphia wholesale market if shipped about 200 miles? We could grow from 1,000 to 1,500 dozens. Please tell us what we could average for good flowers after expenses were deducted.

Answer.—Chrysanthemums can be safely shipped 200 miles, provided they are carefully packed. The Philadelphia market absorbed all the blooms offered this season at prices that were generally satisfactory, but I cannot express an opinion as to whether or not they would pay you. The average price for fine flowers, taking the season through, was from 10 cents to 12½ cents each. From this must be deducted 15 per cent for commissions and $1.25 per hundred pounds express charges from your shipping station. PHIL.

The Market.

Business the last week has been exceptional for this time of year and good stock has found a ready sale. The stores have all been brushing up and getting on their Christmas attire.

The uptown florists were kept busy with funeral work the early part of last week on account of the death of the superintendent of the Montreal street railway. There were more flowers than have been at any other funeral for some time. The number of large pieces was noticeable. The company sent a 4-foot trolley car made of carnations and violets, which was well executed by Miss J. S. Murray and called forth a great deal of comment. McKenna & Son made a broken trolley six feet high and two pyramids with the medal of the Victoria cross on them, placed on a base of bronze galax. This was well done and carried out the idea of his personal friend and member of a party which traveled through Egypt with the deceased. The employees sent numerous pieces, such as large gates ajar, broken columns, pillows, crosses and a deluge of other designs.

Friday brought a good demand for fine stock on account of Lady Allen's ball and the opening of the Mount Royal Club. S. S. Bain had the decorating of the clubhouse, which was carried out on an elaborate scale. The use of large plants of Queen Alexandra daisies and vincas, with the rich color of the walls and draperies, made a handsome effect. Miss Murray had the decorations for Lady Allen's ball. The tables were forty in number and were decorated with Enchantress carnations, orchids and lily of the valley. Miss Murray also had quite a number of dinners preceding the ball. One given at the St. James Club was entirely of violets and lily of the valley.

Various Notes.

Colin Campbell has begun to show holiday specialties. He has quite a large assortment of plant baskets handsomely filled with azaleas, poinsettias, begonias and French maple. On entering the shop one is attracted by a huge cross of honor, of boxwood with a wreath of holly across the arms. This is well executed and presents a striking appearance.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

The Market.

Trade has been good if we take into account the weather, which has been bad for anything like a large business. The outlook for Christmas orders is not rosy. Of course there will be a lot of stock disposed of, but the high prices will restrict business somewhat. It is out of the question to try and do a large over-the-counter trade in this city when carnations bring as high as $2 per dozen, and American Beauty roses $12 to $18 per dozen, with everything else in proportion. Christmas greens are in good supply and at about usual prices, trees being especially of nice quality this season. Good weather would help things immensely, but stock in flowers will be too high in price for a great business.

The regular meeting of our club took place December 11, President Stephens in the chair and a goodly number of members present. Walter Butler, with the Fifth Avenue Floral Co., was elected an active member. the prize exhibits, which will be made at every meeting hereafter. Everything exhibited from now until the first meetings in May will be judged on a scale of points, with a maximum for each exhibit of twenty-five points. At the May meeting the members having the largest point totals will be awarded $5, $3 and $2. This method of exhibits and prizes was arranged by M. B. Faxon, seconded by Messrs. Currie and Siebert. At this meeting the Fifth Avenue Floral Co. received twenty points for an especially good Begonia Gloire de Lorraine; Sherman Stephens fifteen points for a Jerusalem cherry and John H. Williams fifteen points for a fine Tarrytown fern. Just as the meeting was about to adjourn Mrs. M. B. Faxon announced that a lunch had been prepared and ample attention was given to this matter. The next regular meeting falling on Christmas day, it was decided to adjourn to the first Tuesday in January, 1907.

The Morris County Gardeners' and Florists' Society meeting for December was well attended. It was the occasion of our annual election of officers and we wanted to hear Mr. Totty dilate on the new mums. The election resulted as follows: President, Richard Vince; vice-president, Percy Herbert; secretary, E. Reagan; treasurer, William Duckham; executive committee, A. Herrington, A. McKendry, Thomas Stokes, J. Heeremans, A. R. Kennedy, Ernest E. Wild, C. H. Totty, Alexander Brown, O. Koch, R. M. Schultz, William Muhlmichel, H. Vyse. After preparations for the eleventh annual smoker were made Mr. Totty told us of the new chrysanthemums and how they showed up at the exhibitions. In the mind of the speaker, Miss Clay Frick or the white Wm. Duckham was away ahead in whites, and Miriam Hankey stood the same in pinks. The stem, foliage and shipping qualities of these two varieties should make them popular for a long time to come. Mrs. George Hunt, Mrs. Henry Barnes, Kathleen Stoop, Mrs. A. T. Miller, A. H. The new single varieties stand high in the speaker's estimation, being artistic, decorative and a relief from the older kinds. The new French varieties came in for consideration. President Loubet, Sergeant Levy and Mme. L. H. Cochet were among those mentioned. Nathan Smith's efforts as a hybridizer and many of his introductions received high praise. The speaker received a hearty vote of thanks after he had answered a number of questions.

William Duckham, A. Herrington, C. H. Totty and R. M. Schultz were chosen a smoker committee.

Current Comment.

Business during the last week has been good, stock of all kinds being kept cleaned up. The Christmas supply will depend largely on the weather. So far we have experienced cloudy weather and if it should keep that way the supply will be considerably shorter.

Bert Harritt died suddenly last Thursday morning, December 13, from heart failure. He had only recently returned from California, where he had resided for the last three years on account of his health.

Last Sunday the interurban line ran an excursion to New Castle, the beauty spot of America. It was well patronized, as all wished to see where the roses come from. The floral interests have certainly brought New Castle before the people as nothing else could.

H. G. Schilling is improving rapidly and will be able to be around again in a few days.

Arrangements are being completed for the annual meeting of the Indiana State Florists' Association January 8, when a large attendance is desired. An exhibition of the new varieties of flowers will be held. Rooms at the Commercial club have been secured for the purpose.

CUCUMBERS.

We are now in the midst of the most critical period of the year in the growing of this crop and a period in which it pays to give the most careful attention to details. To keep the plants and foliage as strong as possible, and avoid cold draughts, which result in attacks of mildew, airing must be done with the utmost care.

This is a season in which no hard and fast rules in the matter of temperature can be adhered to. It is better to admit air to sweeten the atmosphere and strengthen the plants even if the temperature runs below the desired figure, rather than keep a higher temperature and a close, stuffy atmosphere, which would cause soft growth and thin foliage, thus leaving the plants easy subjects for the attacks of both insect enemies and fungous diseases. Growth at a lower temperature will naturally be slower, but the growth made will be so much better and stronger that future results will more than repay for the little time lost.

Airing, during the winter season especially, is one of the most important particular point in the cultivation of all plants grown or forced under glass and it should be in the hands of a careful, painstaking person, who has thoroughly studied the matter and who knows just how much can safely be given, when to put it on and take it off, according to conditions. In what is known as catchy weather, with cold air and unsteady sunshine, a good deal of time has to be spent if proper attention to this matter is given, but when the work is in the hands of the proper person it is time well spent. We too often see the airing of houses left in the hands of boys, as their time is less valuable, but it is a near-sighted policy, as it saves both trouble and loss if the right man is in the right place. W. S. CROYDON.

SOWING SEEDS.

We would like to ask Mr. Croydon through REVIEW columns how soon we should sow tomato seed so that we could have plants large enough to transplant into lettuce beds in March. We would like to pick our first tomatoes early in June. Also, what time to sow cucumbers for indoor spring crop, and whether they will grow with the tomatoes? When shall we sow seed of cabbage, tomato and cauliflower for early plant trade?

M. & S.

To have strong plants in 5-inch pots to plant out in your bench you should allow eight weeks from time of sowing. If you prefer planting smaller plants, less time will be necessary, but the former is a good size to use and for all the little extra space they occupy, and the small amount of extra labor entailed, it pays to grow them on to this size before setting out, as they will give quicker returns and you ought to be easily able to pick your first tomatoes early in June.

As cucumbers are better planted small, four to five weeks is all that need be allowed from the time of sowing until they will be ready to set out. The best time to set them out will depend a good deal on your command of heat. You could plant out either at the beginning or end of March, according to your circumstances. Cucumbers and tomatoes could be grown together, but as the former needs about 5 degrees higher temperature and a more moist atmosphere, it is much more satisfactory to grow them in separate houses.

Cabbage and cauliflower seeds should be sown about the middle of January and grown on rather cool to give plants for setting out from the middle to the end of April. As tomatoes cannot safely be set out for a month later than this, besides making a quicker growth, about the first part of March is time enough to sow the seeds to procure plants of a nice selling size. W. S. CROYDON.

CYANIDE FUMIGATION.

December 4 I fumigated our greenhouse with hydrocyanic acid gas. The house is a lean-to situated on a hillside and is 48x125 and of an average height of nearly eight feet. My calculations are that the cubical contents are 46,625 feet. I used three jars with sulphuric acid and twelve and a half ounces each of cyanide of potassium as sold by Roessler & Hasslacher for use in cyanide mills for dissolving gold. This dose was put in at 6 p. m. The house was opened next morning, when all the gas was gone out of the house. The aphis on the lettuce and red spider on carnations were unharmed. Some lettuce plants that had been set out the day before were knocked down and wilted. Since then the edges of three-fourths of the lettuce leaves have been turning black and gray, and on the plants where these leaves are affected the aphis is unaffected. The house was not watered on the day the cyanide was used. The carnations were not injured. A. D. W.

It appears to me that the trouble must have been with the chemicals used, for that amount of cyanide certainly ought to have killed all insect life.

To destroy aphis on lettuce in a house of the dimensions given by you I would not use more than fifteen ounces of cyanide altogether, using three jars with one quart of sulphuric acid, one quart water and five ounces of cyanide in each. I have used it stronger than this without injury to the plants; but with a good, tight house I find that this strength gives satisfactory results.

We procure our cyanide and acid at the local drug store. I am sorry I can not give you the analysis of strength, but it might pay you to look into this matter and find out how the article used by you compares with the best grades sold by first-class drug stores.

In the same period the imports of plants, bulbs, etc., were of the aggregate value of $20,244.

THE FREE SEEDS FIGHT.

The house committee on agriculture devoted two days of last week to hearing the seedsmen's case against the congressional seed distribution. As was stated in a telegram from Washington published last week, the following seedsmen were present: Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va., president of the American Seed Trade Association; W. Atlee Burpee, William Henry Maule and Walter P. Stokes, of Philadelphia; Alexander Forbes and Patrick O'Mara, of Peter Henderson & Co., New York; Henry B. Hathaway, Rochester; C. F. Wood, Louisville, Ky.; F. W. Bolgiano and other Washington and Baltimore seedsmen. This committee was given close attention and it is probable that the agricultural appropriation bill will again fail to provide for the seed distribution. Whether or not the paragraph will be inserted by amendment on the floor, as it was last year, cannot be foretold, but the seedsmen present in Washington last week feel that much progress has been made.

EUROPEAN SEED NOTES.

Two novelties of value in garden peas are being offered for the first time by Bell & Bieberstedt, Leith, Scotland, called The Bell and The Scotsman. The former is said to be the heaviest cropping pea for main crop in cultivation. The pods are always in pairs and of exceptional size, containing a dozen peas in each. The haulm is strong and dark green. The latter variety is a similar pea, but experts say The Bell is the better flavor. Each is distinct from the other and it is claimed each is a great advance on any variety at present in commerce.

Storrie & Storrie, of Dundee, Scotland, are this year offering to the trade a novelty in their new Excelsior strain of Iceland poppies. In this strain there are about thirty distinct colors and the shadings are said to be particularly pleasing. Some have a big blotch of a distinct color at the base of each petal, a feature hitherto unknown in Iceland poppies and a decided break in a new and desirable direction.

In cauliflowers, the crops in France are fairly good and the quality average. The like may be said of Danish productions. But because of the shortage of Italian varieties and other cultures there has been a heavy demand for all stocks, so that prices are rapidly on the rise and likely to stop only at a high figure. J. B.

PEA CROPS IN ENGLAND.

The crops of seed peas in England are fine this season. Not for many years has there been anything like the quantity per acre harvested. The quality has not for many years been of such high standard nor of such a uniform nature. Some samples I have seen of the garden varieties of the wrinkled Marrowfat class required hardly any hand picking, but coming straight from the threshing and cleaning almost in a suitable condition for retailing. Of course with this condition of things prices are low and likely to go still lower. This season would be an excellent opportunity for some American and Canadian trade growers to replenish their strains of standard sorts from reliable English stocks. Both quality and price will scarcely ever be more favorable than during the present season. Given a favorable weather condition, and it is a well-known fact that British grown seed peas, especially of the large wrinkled garden varieties, can compete with peas grown in any other part of the world.

It has been the custom for many years, in market gardens and the like, to grow peas, where they are intended for pulling green, with the aid of sticks or wire, so that the haulm is kept off the ground, but it is seldom this method is practiced in growing for seed, probably the idea being that the method would prove too costly. Where quantity handled is the first consideration, it would be impracticable, but where quality only is considered this method, for seed saving purposes, has much to commend it.

The results of some experiments which came under my notice the other day at the establishment of one of our leading seedsmen, amply proved the statement. A given number of seeds were grown under the ordinary method of seed culture and a like number by the aid of pea sticks some four feet high, with the result that the latter method yielded three-fourths more seed. The waste during the process of hand picking was less and the grain averaged quite one-fourth larger and heavier. Perhaps most important of all in the stick grown samples was a total absence of small grains. This was no doubt due to the fact that every grain in the pod fully ripened and matured, even the grains at the extreme end of the pod. These improved qualities were no doubt due to the fact that the growths obtained the fullest benefit of light and air and through being supported were not injured by excessive rains. As an aid in selecting and improving a strain it is invaluable, as the cultivator is able at a glance to detect and take out any undesirable growths and impurities in the stock. J. B.

hay and seed-producng standpoint. This conclusion no doubt applies correctly to the majority of European varieties of red clover, particularly those from Italy, France, and some parts of Germany, which appear to be altogether unsuited to the soil and climatic condtions of the clover-growng area of the United States, says a bulletin of the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

The term "European clover seed" as used in the United States is a very loose one, applied indiscriminately to all seed imported into this country from European ports. It includes not only seed grown in Europe, but also seed from South America, Canada, and the United States itself, the seed having been exported in years when the crop was large and prices consequently low, only to be shipped back again to this country in years when the balance of supply and demand had shifted in the opposite directon. Inasmuch as red clover is grown to a large extent in almost all the countries of Europe and quite careful distinctions are made there between seed from a number of sources, the general designation of "European clover seed" hitherto used in this country appears altogether unwarranted and misleading. The same erroneous classification of American red clover seed is current in Europe, no distinction being made whether from New York, Tennessee, or Oregon.

One of the most frequent complaints made by European growers against American clover seed is on account of the dustiness of the hay produced from this seed. This dustiness is due almost wholly to the hairiness of the plant. There is a great difference in this respect between the hairy domestic and smooth foreign types. A smooth one is the promising Russian clover from the government of Orel. This difference in hairiness is accompanied by other distinctions, the most important of which from an economic standpoint is the much greater succulence of the smooth plants and the consequently finer quality of the hay, the loss due to coarse, woody, uneatable stems being reduced to almost nothing.

The hairless Orel clover matures practically two weeks later than the domestic strains of medium red clover. This factor is of special importance in sections where corn is the chief crop. There is one drawback in the lateness of maturing of the Orel strain of clover, namely, that it militates against the production of a heavy second crop. However, in southern Indiana, in a typical part of the clover section, the Kief and Orel strains gave in the order mentioned the best yields of seed after recleaning. The heavy yield of the first cutting of the hairless clover should prove indirectly advantageous in wheat-growing sections, especially in the winter-wheat belt, when it is desired to hasten the rotation back to wheat, as the increased product from this cutting would, where feed production was not a paramount necessity, in a measure justify the immediate or early plowing up of the field preparatory to reseeding to wheat.

In addition to the advantage of the smooth clover already mentioned—its exceptionally large yielding power for the first crop—the fine quality and dustlessness of its hay also command attention. In reference to its yielding qualities, in a number of different states it has outyielded from a few hundred pounds to almost two tons all of the domestic strains that have been under test.

is the earliest, largest and most exquisite colored stock for winter forcing that has ever been introduced. Habit, foliage and color of flowers are entirely distinct from any other strain. The highest praise has been bestowed upon it by those who grew it this past season.

If wanted for Easter, seed should be sown in December. The above strain produces 90 per cent double flowers, the highest percentage of any strain. The following varieties:

Marguerite, pure white	1-32 oz, 75c
Faust, most exquisite pink	1-32 oz, 75c
Valentine, delicate lavender	1-32 oz., 75c

BULBS IN CHANNEL ISLANDS.

There has been of late years a growing disposition on the part of British bulb growers to discredit Channel Island bulbs because they are smaller than the Dutch and Fen District bulbs. The Islanders are now remedying this defect (according to English ideas) by sending certain varieties of bulbs, particularly Telemonius plenus and that class, to Holland to be "blown out." There is no gainsaying the fact that such treatment tends to a quicker sale; but as a flower-producing medium the bulbs are certainly less reliable than the smaller but more solid ones. English growers may take it as a reliable fact, that size for size, the Jersey and Guernsey bulbs are heavier than the Dutch; and they are distinctly healthier and have the reputation of being more floriferous. The Dutch bulb merchants know this. The past season witnessed the heaviest sales to the Dutchmen yet known. We have bought largely from them; but much cheaper than they purchased from our growers.

It is certain, too, that the Islanders are becoming more enamored of certain varieties, double whites, Golden Spurs, and the better Ornatus and Emperor types. The best forcing varieties are being sought after. The heavily scented and weighty kinds, such as Grand Monarque, Soliel d'Or, etc., are steadily declining in favor. Indeed, the situation may be summed up by saying that the Channel Island growers are forcing heavily to come in before the Scilly Isles, and planting outside only the best and most popular sorts. Bazelman minor is clearly gaining in public favor. There is, too, a sharp inquiry for the rarer and most beautiful "glads" and the bulbs of the Nerine Sarniensis (the beautiful Guernsey lily) are being bought up by the nurserymen.—Horticultural Trade Journal.

THE EUROPEAN VALLEY TRADE.

The German exporters of lily of the valley are about finishing their season of fresh crowns for this year. It must be considered one of the most successful the German export trade has ever had, at least for the largest and best class firms.

As regards the increased price of retarded crowns of finest quality for 1907 delivery, the old price of 30 or 32 shillings is not sufficient to properly retard a really first-class retarding sample, with the result that many of the smaller and less particular firms used for cold storage any samples they could get hold of, providing they could be bought cheap.

In my experience I think I am not wrong in saying there are quite a dozen or more distinct types of valley samples, and not more than two or three are suitable for cold storage, and yet nine out of ten growers in England, if asked the question, would tell you there were only two types, the Berlin and Hamburg, and both if strong enough would successfully cold store. This idea is totally wrong. It requires an expert to pick a proper sample out of the many types and it requires a big capital to buy them in quantity as the retarding samples are usually the finest and most expensive strains and the most carefully and expensively grown.

It is noticeable how difficult it is now to get the special samples for very special quality spikes that growers readily obtained from Germany years ago. This is due in a great measure to most of the best pips being previously packed out for American growers, they paying a very high price for them, and English buyers have to be content with the ordinary first quality. This regrettable state of things will not be remedied until the Englishman consents to pay the higher price now paid by America without so much grumbling and dissatisfaction usually experienced when asking an advance in price in England. The American buyer does not kick at a high price if the quality is up to the price, but rather offers to pay an even higher price if the quality can also be raised equal to the price.—Horticultural Trade Journal.

PROVIDENCE.

The Market.

Business along all lines is satisfactory and the market has been unsually active since the last week of November. Good prices and a thorough cleaning out of stock from day to day has been the rule. A week of extremely severe weather prevailed the first week in December and heavy firing was necessary to keep stock growing when the mercury out of doors ranged from zero to 10 degrees below. It was the worst period of cold that has struck New England in December in many years. This market is well supplied with the common grades of roses, but extra fancy stock is not abundant. Bride and Bridesmaid are bringing from $2 to $4 per hundred for ordinary stock; fancies average from $6 to $8 per hundred.

Carnations, the best selling flowers we have, are far from plentiful and for an entire month it has not been possible to meet demands. They bring about $1 per dozen retail; from $3 to $4 per hundred wholesale. Chrysanthemums are about done, although a few nice blooms of Merry Christmas are offered. Bulbous stock is coming in freely, especially Roman hyacinths and Paper White narcissi. Greens are in good supply, excepting hardy ferns, and we have plenty of stock for the holiday trade.

Various Notes.

Henry A. Moore, of Moore, Hentz & Nash, wholesale florists, New York, was a caller among the leading growers of this vicinity last week. The object of his visit was to meet the growers who consign to his house and learn the possibilities of the supply of stock for Christmas.

The bursting of a boiler caused serious loss to growing stock, especially roses and callas, at the Sunnycrest greenhouses last week. The accident occurred at a time when the mercury stood at a point the lowest known hereabouts for many years, and before steam could be generated from a reserve boiler the frost had accomplished its fatal work, resulting in a loss of several thousands of dollars' worth of stock. These disheartening conditions do not put enterprising growers out of business, however, for two large boilers were immediately ordered by telegraph; and when this notice appears in print the devastated houses will be planted to sweet peas, lettuce and radishes, followed later by a crop of tomatoes. The carnation stock, comprising about 22,000 plants, was uninjured, these houses being heated from another source.

Rennie & Thomson have their new and commodious store at 135 and 137 Washington street practically complete, and will carry a large line of seeds, bulbs and florists' supplies. They will be the first among firms in this city to make special efforts for a mail order seed trade.

William Hay, who enjoys and justly deserves the title of being our best rose grower, has a magnificent crop for Christmas. He grows Bride, Bridesmaid, Richmond, Golden Gate and Killarney. He has several houses planted to Princess of Wales violets, which also promise a good cut for the holidays.

The downtown stores look radiant and attractive with their display of Christmas bells and festooning. The crowds upon our streets are indicative of a record-breaking business this season.

NEWPORT, R. I.

The annual meeting of the Newport Horticultural Society was held Tuesday evening, December 11, in Mercury hall, President MacLellan in the chair. The report of the treasurer shows the financial standing of the society to be good and improved since last year. The financial secretary's report showed the same condition, showing also an increased membership. The recording secretary's report, which was unusually comprehensive, reviewed the work of the society during the year, pointing out weak points and suggesting remedies.

The following officers were then elected: President, Bruce Butterton; first vice-president, Samuel Speers; second vice-president, James Robertson; recording secretary, David McIntosh; financial secretary, Joseph Gibson; treasurer, Col. A. K. McMahon; sergeant-at-arms, William F. Smith; executive committee, Alexander MacLellan, Dr. A. J. Anderson, William J. Matson, John T. Allan, James J. Sullivan, Andrew Christensen, Stewart Ritchie, William F. Smith, John N. Gibson and the officers ex officio; auditors, Thomas B. Connally, W. H. Young and W. S. Sisson.

The outlook for Christmas is unusually bright. Stock coming in from out-of-town growers looks first-class and worth the slight advance in price asked. Christmas trees are exceedingly scarce, so much so that many retailers are experiencing considerable trouble in procuring a supply. Large consignments of plants from big growers arrived early in the week. Max Reilly.

I am much pleased with the Review and would not do without it.—Perley R. Follett, Haverhill, Mass.

...THE...

Chrysanthemum

By Arthur Herrington

Formerly president Chrysanthemum Society of America.

The most complete and comprehensive work on the cultivation of the chrysanthemum that has yet been published in America. Its scope and character may be gleaned from the list of contents, which comprises chapters on composts; planting; benches, boxes or pots; general cultural details; crown and terminal buds; feeding, its object and application; care of the buds; exhibition and judging; specimen plants, plants in pots; raising from seed and hybridizing; sports; hardy chrysanthemums; chrysanthemums for south and west; insect pests and diseases; classification and selection of varieties for special purposes; history of the chrysanthemum, etc. The book will be welcomed for the lucid, comprehensive, as well as the practical character of its contents. Handsomely illustrated. 168 pages, 5x7 inches. Price 50c postpaid.

DULUTH, MINN.

W. W. Seekins says that business the last year has been satisfactory, the Thanksgiving trade being exceptionally heavy. He had a fine lot of his own mums, which he completely sold out. Mr. Seekins has built four new, modern houses and rebuilt two, also a new violet house 6x105 feet. He has them all running and filled with fine stock. He has now about 20,000 feet of glass in charge of William Jaap, who was for a long time with the Garfield Park Flower Co., Chicago. Last July Mr. Seekins bought out Mr. LeBorious' interest in the plant. Mr. LeBorious then started to build three greenhouses in one of the suburbs of Duluth, but, before completing the plant, again sold out to Mr. Seekins. These houses have now been completed and are planted to lettuce, but will be used for roses in the spring.

STEAMER SAILINGS.

PACIFIC COAST.

BERRIED GREENS.

The California redberry is being used more than ever during the present season by the florists and decorators, and it has become almost indispensable as a substitute where there is a shortage of flowers. They have been used for every possible function, from a wedding bouquet to a window decoration, and, because of their showy, scarlet berries, dark green foliage and wonderful keeping qualities, they are here to stay. Many thousands of tons are sold in this portion of California yearly. Although there are thousands of acres covered with them in various parts of the country, the patches in proximity to the railroads are being rapidly depleted, and each succeeding year finds the gatherers going farther inland, making the expense of gathering and marketing more each successive season.

Although the Heteromeles arbutifolia is strictly a native growth and is nowhere cultivated in the state, it is one of the best paying propositions that has fallen to the lot of the farmer. The labor of gathering it is slight and little care has to be used in packing, so that it is almost all profit. The price has been advanced about fifty per cent during the last year, and the retailers, who for the last ten years have been paying from $35 to $40 per ton, have had to stand an advance to $50 and $60. This is in line with everything else in regard to advancement of prices, and the end is not yet.

The madrono is also in considerable favor with decorators, and while it is not so easy to handle as the redberry, its glossy leaves, clean brown stems and large scarlet berries make it one of our most attractive native growths.

The so-called Oregon grape, Berberis Aquifolium, is used universally here for decorating, and the supply in this state is practically exhausted. We are receiving our largest supplies from Oregon, and many hundreds of crates are handled here weekly. Its glossy brown leaves and splendid lasting qualities stand the decorator well in hand, and it is especially favored for holiday trimmings.

Our old standby, the wild huckleberry, still stands supreme as an all-round green. The stock of this is also being rapidly depleted, and in a few years it will be only a memory. Forest fires, clearings for homes, cattle ranges and its wholesale destruction by the men who gather it for florists' use have made a big difference in the supply.

California still imports almost all the English holly used here. Several patches have been planted for the purpose of marketing the branches, but central and southern California are too dry to have much success with a shrub as fond of moisture as is the holly. We get some of our supply from British Columbia and Washington, where the abundance of rain makes an ideal condition for its cultivation. G.

WALNUTS IN OREGON.

The Oregon Nursery Co., at Salem, Ore., has arranged with the Southern Pacific railroad for a car of walnuts to be brought into the state from California for seeding purposes. Small lots have been contracted for in the past from the Bear state, and others have been received from France and England. This is the first instance recorded that a full car has been ordered. The walnut industry is said to have grown wonderfully in Oregon. At Dundee, Thomas Prince has seventeen acres under cultivation and the second crop was picked this year. He has set out a number of small trees on a 200-acre tract which is now bearing prunes. When the walnut trees are matured he proposes to grub out the prunes. Another orchard is maintained on the Ladd farm, near North Yamhill, and a third at Gaston, by F. K. Newell.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

A slight falling off in business has manifested itself since making our last report, but this is merely a repetition of our experience of former years and may be termed the calm before the storm. We found time last week to interview a few retailers as to the outlook for Christmas, and surely we have reason to expect a heavy holiday trade, as the greatest preparations are being made for it. We do not prophesy an abundance of any one thing in the cut flower line, as Old Sol has not shown his radiant face except at long intervals. But this deficiency we hope to offset by the splendid lot of flowering plants, which when offered for sale will form the grandest display ever seen in Portland.

Various Notes.

A partnership formed between J. B. Pilkington, a prominent nurseryman here, and F. D. Rennison, who has been with the Portland Seed Co. for three years, was announced recently. We are informed that an important feature of the venture will be the installing of a complete line of florists' supplies, which should pay well here. Mr. Rennison has gone east to purchase stock, and on his return the firm will open for active business at Front and Jankill streets. This will also give Mr. Pilkington an opportunity to bring his fine nursery stock before the downtown public. After spending several weeks in Europe last summer the last named gentleman was surprised to find on his return a railroad running through his nursery, and was obliged to resort to legal measures to have some of the curves taken out of it. Mr. Pilkington expects a satisfactory settlement.

Another new partnership of interest to the fraternity was announced December 9, at high noon, when Emmeline Street, the charming daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Street, of Clackamas, was married to William Haberlach, a young business man of the same place, in the presence of fifty guests. The house had all the embellishments suited to the occasion, the ceremony being performed under a canopy of smilax and Richmond roses, all grown in Papa's greenhouses. The afternoon was devoted to the enjoyment of a bountiful repast and extending congratulations to the young couple. H. J. M.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have had continued rainy weather for the last week and flowers, owing to the dark weather, have decreased considerably in quantity. Violets are about all that are really plentiful and, although the price of them has not been reduced by the growers, there are quantities of them and they are being used for all purposes.

Carnations are in short supply, but will not be as plentiful as anticipated earlier in the season and we are compelled to revise our prices to meet the changed conditions. No orders can be accepted for over 100,000 from one firm. Prices for delivery beginning in January, are as follows: 1000 seeds, $2.00; 6000 seeds, $10.00; 13,000 seeds, $20.00; 25,000 seeds, $35.00; 50,000 seeds, $65.00; 100,000 seeds, $110 00. F. the quality is excellent and the prices have advanced a little. Fancy stock costs the retailers from 60 cents to 75 cents per dozen and ordinary varieties at about half that price. With roses there is much the same condition. Beauties are in fair supply and the best quality sells at $4 to $6 per dozen. Brides and Maids at from 50 cents to $1 per dozen are in good supply.

Narcissi are backward on account of the lack of moisture and they wholesale at $1.50 per hundred. Valley are much easier than they have been up to date and the wholesale price is $4 per hundred.

Advices from the south tell of a shortage of the outdoor crop of poinsettias, caused by the cold snap of last month. There is some indoor stock in town at from $6 to $9 per dozen. Outdoor mums hold on well and the prices have been raised greatly by the growers. From 75 cents to $1.50 per dozen is asked for flowers of fair quality. Inside mums are practically over for the season, only a few Mrs. Jerome Jones and Bonnaffons being in evidence.

Various Notes.

J. B. Pilkington, of Portland, Ore., has disposed of a carload of bay trees to the local dealers.

The price of evergreen wreaths has been advanced from $10 to $14 per hundred by the green goods men. A claim is made that owing to the scarcity of workmen extra prices had to be paid for labor.

Two Japanese establishments have been opened in Oakland during the last week.

There are at present thirty-five stores in San Francisco as against seventy-five before the fire. At the rate they are increasing we will have our full quota in another season.

Ferrari Bros. are cutting some extra good Beauties at present. Podesta & Baldocchi, J. H. Sievers & Co. and Pelicano & Co. handle most of their stock.

H. Plath, of Ocean View, reports a heavy demand for cut adiantum sprays. Mr. Plath has built up a large shipping trade since the April fire and finds his present stock unequal to the orders received.

Henry Morris has purchased two acres of land beyond Elmhurst and will prepare himself to actively enter the wholesale business next season. G.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—William Scott has been appointed chairman of the committee on flowers and bedding plants of the Western New York Horticultural Society. This is all the more a compliment as Mr. Scott was not a member of the society at the time of his appointment.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

THE Association of Pennsylvania Nurserymen will hold its annual meeting at Harrisburg January 16 and 17. W. H. Moon is president.

THE apple crop of 1906 is estimated as fifty per cent larger than in 1905, totaling over 36,000,000 barrels. All the cold storage houses are full.

AFTER many years of service L. R. Bryant, Princeton, Ill., declined reëlection as secretary of the Illinois State Horticultural Society at its recent meeting.

EDWARD MORRIS, for thirty years head of the firm operating the Fonthill Nurseries, Fonthill, Ont., purposes retiring as shortly as he can find a purchaser for his large interests.

I. N. BROWN, who has had charge of the Atlantic nursery for the last fifteen years, expects to continue in the business on his own account. As Stark Bros. intend to go out of business in Atlantic, Mr. Brown will remain on the present site.

C. G. NIEMAN, manager of the Rosedale Nurseries, at Fremont, Neb., is preparing to establish branch nurseries in Pierre, S. D., and on his land near Hayes in Stanley county. He will ship for spring delivery 200,000 Norway maple trees.

GOOD apple seedlings are scarce, as has previously been reported, but the cry of the growers has been that prices were too low and now that buyers are compelled to accept the higher level it ought to be possible to keep prices on a profitable basis, even with a larger crop next year.

TIGHE & MCDONALD, of the Montana Nursery Co., Missoula, Mont., are making preparations to establish a nursery at Billings. They have just purchased 100 acres of land on the big flat near Billings and are making arrangements to erect a warehouse and packing plant. The cost of the plant will be more than $10,000.

WESTERN nurseries, most of which have paid little or no attention to ornamental stock, are getting in line with the demand and it may freely be said that although the supplies are twice what they were a brief while ago, the call for hardy stock for decorative planting is only at its beginning in the greater part of the country.

THE prospectus for the adoption of uniform state standards of inspection and certification of nursery stock do not brighten at the rate nurserymen had hoped they would. In fact, it looks as though the only hope lies in a national system of inspection and certification of stock in interstate traffic, and this seems to be a long way off.

TIMBER PLANTING.

It is stated that the Wichita Nursery Co., W. F. Schell, proprietor, Wichita, Kan., recently sold two large orders of trees, one order of 100,000 trees to R. V. Converse, of Cheyenne, Okla., and a second one of 150,000 to Underwood & Viles, of Hutchinson, Kan. These trees, which are mostly for timber, will be planted as an investment and consist principally of Catalpa speciosa and black locust, to be used for railroad ties and posts.

The Yaggy plantation at Hutchinson has proven a wonderful success in the hardy catalpa and, in fact, they have already sold enough to pay for the cost of the land three times, with hardly one-half of the plantation exhausted. As the railroad tie proposition increases and the forest supply is diminishing the catalpa growing industry is one of the best in this section of the country.

SMITH'S BENEFACTION.

It has become known that William Smith, the wealthy nurseryman of Geneva, N. Y., head of the W. & T. Smith Co., has made a proposition to the trustees of Hobart College whereby that institution will receive from him $500,000. It is stated that the principal condition is that a woman's department shall be established in connection with the institution. The plan is not to convert Hobart College into a coeducational institution, but rather make it a college in which the woman's department is to be coördinated with the men's. This means that the men and women will not attend classes together, but will be taught by the same faculty. The classes for the two sexes will be at different hours.

Mr. Smith has had the plan in mind for some years and his interest in Hobart College is well understood, as are his desires as to the direction of its future development. Five or six years ago he was reported as being about to endow the institution, but there was a halt in the arrangements until the present time.

SAN JOSE SCALE.

Bulletin No. 62 of the Bureau of Entomology, U. S. Department of Agriculture, is entitled "The San Jose or Chinese Scale." The author is C. L. Marlott, acting chief of the bureau, and the ninety pages, freely illustrated, contain the last work on the subject, up to December 5. The whole prolific literature of the subject is here summarized, from origination to the latest legislation on the subject. Eight pages are given to remedies. This is what is said of the fumigation of nursery stock:

"All nursery stock which is under the least suspicion of contamination with the San Jose scale should be fumigated; and it is perhaps worth while to fumigate in any case to give the utmost assurance of safety to the purchaser. The hydrocyanic acid gas fumigation is the one to use. The proportions of the chemicals are as follows. Refined potassium cyanide (98 per cent), one ounce; commercial sulphuric acid, one ounce; water, three fluid ounces—to every 100 cubic feet of space in the fumigating room or house. The latter should be as nearly air-tight as possible and provided with means of ventilation above and at the side, operated from without, so that at the end of the treatment the poisonous gases can be allowed to escape without the necessity of anyone entering the chamber. The generator of the gas may be any glazed earthenware vessel of one or two gallons capacity, and should be placed on the floor of the fumigating room and the water and acid necessary to generate the gas added to it. The cyanide should be added last, preferably in lumps the size of a walnut. Promptly after adding the cyanide the room should be vacated and the door made fast. The treatment should continue forty minutes. It must be borne in mind that the gas is extremely poisonous and must under no circumstances be inhaled. The gas treatment is effective against the scale on growing trees in the orchard also; but the difficulty and expense of the treatment, except for nursery stock, make it prohibitive in the case of deciduous fruits."

NITRATE OF SODA.

Natural nitrate of soda is at present only obtained from the deposits in the northern part of the Republic of Chili in the Provinces of Tarapaca and Atacama. The district is practically a rainless one, from three to five years sometimes passing without rain, and even when it falls it is hardly in sufficient quantities to penetrate the topmost layer of soil. This fact has an important bearing on the possibility of discovering similar accumulations elsewhere, as nitrate of soda is especially soluble in water, and deposits of this character could only continue to exist in a region such as this. The nitrate district is a desolate waste, says the Gardeners' Magazine. The surface is usually composed of sand and gypsum, beneath which lies a layer of earth and detritus some three feet to twelve feet thick. Beneath this lies the nitrate of soda to a depth of from one foot to twelve feet. The nitrate is obtained by boring through the upper layers, and introducing charges of gunpowder. This is fired by means of a slow match, and the explosion enables a considerable area to be reached. It is then loaded into wagons, and conveyed by a light railway to the factory. Here the natural salts are purified by crystallization to produce commercial nitrate of soda containing ninety-five per cent nitrate, having fifteen and one-half per cent of nitrogen. During the last ten years there has been a large increase in the production and consumption of nitrate of soda. According to published estimates the consumption was 1,066,220 tons in 1896, 1,338,890 tons in 1900, and 1,543,120 tons in 1905. Since 1896 there has been a steady appreciation in values.

A BURBANK STORY.

Many things recently have been credited to Luther Burbank; "if you don't want to stand for it yourself, lay it to Burbank; he won't deny it." Here is the latest, from an exchange:

Luther Burbank, the plant wizard, showed last month to the students of Stanford university an apple that was sweet on one side and sour on the other.

"This apple shows us," Mr. Burbank said, "how different treatments will have different effects. It shows how environment causes the most radical changes."

He smiled.

"As in apples, so in men," he said. "There used to live in Santa Rosa a good, kind man, but unfortunately he married a shrewish wife and the woman changed his nature.

"One morning after his wife had called him a good-for-nothing loafer and snatched his breakfast away he started off, hungry and sore, for work.

"A sour-looking woman entered the car he was on. She got into a violent dispute with the conductor over her change. Finally, red with rage, she looked about her and said:

"'Is there a gentleman in this car who will stand by and see a lady insulted?'

"The hungry man whose nature had been spoiled rose eagerly.

"'Yes, madam,' he said, 'I will.'"

DETROIT.

The Market.

There is an unusual activity in the trade, as all are looking forward to a banner Christmas business. A stretch of dark weather, the worst kind for bringing out blooming plants and cut flowers, has made stock scarce. As is usual at this season of the year, there is considerable funeral work and white flowers are wanted.

Roses and carnations are at a premium. Extra fine Bridesmaids are bringing from $4 to $12.50 per hundred. Although but few Beauties are handled by our local commission-houses, still large shipments are received daily at the downtown stores from outside growers.

Carnations bring from $2.50 to $5, for the quality of stock varies a great deal. Many growers send in fine large blooms, but weak stems. The best outside stock comes from Mount Clemens, some of the Enchantress being unusually fine.

Chrysanthemums, though reported a thing of the past in the last issue, are still hanging on and we will have mums through the holidays. Yanoma, Arline, Chadwick, white and yellow Jerome Jones are still in the ring. The whites move fast, but this can hardly be said of the yellows.

Violets are scarce and most likely will be away up in price for Christmas. Valley is used in large quantities, for corsages, debutante bouquets, funerals, etc. Stevia, cosmos, Roman hyacinths and narcissi sell well. Poinsettias seem plentiful. Owing to the unfavorable weather, azaleas are scarce. All the stores are well supplied with poinsettias in pots, cyclamens, cherries, primroses, and the usual run of palms and ferns.

Various Notes.

Louis Rusk has received many orders for ground pine garlands from the local florists.

Clyde Chase, of Schroeter's, picks up many an odd dollar through his ability as a musician.

August Von Boeselager, of Mount Clemens, is shipping some of the finest carnations seen in this vicinity. A white, Moonlight, is especially fine. H. S.

Fargo, N. D.—Prof. Waldron, of the State Agricultural College, while at Chicago to attend the stock show, visited a number of greenhouse establishments and formed definite ideas of what the college needs in the shape of two new greenhouses it is hoped the legislature will provide money for.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

We are experiencing disagreeable weather for this time of the year and the outlook for cut flowers for Christmas is not encouraging. However, business last week was rushing. Of late many notable people have passed away and a great amount of design work was called for. Funeral work holds its own, while a few weddings, dinners, receptions and other social occasions cleaned up practically everything.

Roses are getting short and prices higher. Carnations are selling too fast and the supply is much shorter. They are selling at $4 to $6 per hundred and it is feared there will be a strong advance by next week.

Violets are climbing up and double violets are almost out of commission. Some good large mums are still to be had. A large supply of Paper Whites is ready for the Christmas rush. White Roman hyacinths are in time, while callas are scarce. Harrisii and longiflorum lilies are not plentiful. Mignonette and sweet peas are on the market. Christmas greens are plentiful and in steady demand.

Various Notes.

Harry Ekas has completed a 100-foot sash house for storing his rose bushes.

F. Seidlich has secured his stall again for the holidays.

John McCormick is cutting some fine carnations and sending in some extra Harrisii lilies.

The Baltimore Florists' Exchange is having a heavy run on cut flowers and is unable to meet the demand.

The bulb representatives were in town last week taking orders for next year, and report trade fair.

G. H. Siddons has two large windows tastefully decorated with Christmas supplies and will also have a stall in the market.

A large amount of various sizes of plants will be used in many Christmas gardens.

John R. Donn is doing a rushing business in decorative plants.

Some of our florists will not set prices on flowers now to be delivered after Christmas. J. L. T.

Medicine Hat, Man.—L. H. Shepley, of Winnipeg, a financial agent, spent last week in Medicine Hat in the interests of Winnipeg parties who contemplate investing $50,000 in a greenhouse plant for the cultivation of roses and carnations for the Winnipeg and western market. The stock is now brought from eastern Canada and Minneapolis. The cheap gas for fuel has brought Medicine Hat to their attention and it is looked upon as a favorable place for such a business.

MABELLE

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. Delivery January 5 to 10 and later. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

PITTSBURG.

Current Comment.

Monday, December 17, finds us in the midst of a heavy snow storm, with the growers looking blue. Carnations for Christmas are quoted at $4 to $15 per hundred, roses $8 to $25 per hundred, and Beauties $3 to $18 per dozen.

The green goods man is the fellow who has been strictly in it for business during the last week. Stock of all kinds has been plentiful enough, except bouquet green, both loose and wreathing. There is not enough of either to go around and the result is pine is bringing more than it is worth.

The retail shops have some pretty effects with boxwood, red immortelles and poinsettias. There has not been a great deal of business in Christmas goods, but much is expected this week, as business in general continues so good that hopes are high for the holidays and all predict that this will be the banner year.

The wholesalers are disposing of everything they can get, as stock is scarce for the holidays, and things do not look as good as one might wish.

Various Notes.

Joseph N. Thomas, of Greensburg, has opened a branch store at Latrobe, Pa., and he reports business good at both places.

At the last meeting of the florists' club some of the greenhouse men had considerable sport at the expense of one of the speakers about artificial poinsettias, but a trip around the retail stores would convince them that there is a place for them and that they are beautiful when properly used; at least they sell at a large profit, which is something in their favor.

Boxwood seems to be the favorite evergreen this year among the best shops, and holly is largely left to the grocers and market people.

Visitors: Joseph Thomas, Greensburg, Pa.; J. W. Glenn, Kittanning, Pa.; W. A. Herbert, Wellsville, O.

Hoo-Hoo.

Wellston, O.—Mrs. H. Wyckoff has been in the business but a little over a year and is doing well. She is already planning the enlargement of her greenhouses.

Peoria, Ill.—B. Juergens was a recent visitor in Chicago, getting into touch with the latest ideas in floral decoration and incidentally attending the big stock show.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

At an important meeting of the Bloomington Florists' Club December 13 preliminary steps were taken towards arranging for the meeting of the Illinois State Florists' Association to be held in this city on Tuesday and Wednesday, February 19 and 20, 1907. J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, president of the state association, was present and delivered an address upon "Organization." After the address by Mr. Ammann the routine business of the local club, which has a membership of twenty-five florists in Bloomington and Normal, was transacted and the following committee on exhibition appointed: George Washburn, Fred Roe and W. T. Hempstead.

A flower show is to be one of the principal features of the meeting of the state association here next February. The location of the show as well as the place of holding the business sessions have not yet been decided upon. The program is now being prepared and will be ready for publication within a comparatively short time.

SHIOCTON, WIS.

An interesting experiment on a large scale is being undertaken at Shiocton, Wis. A syndicate, under the name of the Shiocton Garden Land Co., has purchased a tract of land embracing about 3,500 acres. The whole tract will be used for truck farming. Already $150,000 has been spent in the purchase and drainage of the land. Eight miles of ditch have already been dug, two dredges excavating 200 feet or more a day. The tract of land is four miles long and a railroad runs through it.

It has not been decided as yet whether the big garden will be worked in shares or whether the land will be opened to farmers generally, who would in that case dispose of the produce as their own property. The whole scheme is in the nature of an experiment, part of the land being fertilized and part left in the natural state. Matthew Crawford, of Cuyahoga Falls, O., will have charge of the work. He has had years of experience in gardening on a large scale. Mr. Crawford will also grow gladiolus bulbs extensively for market.

West Grove, Pa.—J. M. Cooper has sold his range, with stock, to Daniel H. Green and Thomas W. Baylis. The entire place was devoted to growing chrysanthemums. The new firm of Green & Baylis will propagate chrysanthemum young stock, and they expect to have a large stock of rooted cuttings in season.

The Florists' Manual

a Business Book For Business Men

THOROUGHLY REVISED AND BROUGHT UP TO DATE.....

NO SCIENCE, BUT LOTS OF PRACTICAL COMMON SENSE

Just the thing for a gift for your employees or friends in the trade

Give us the Name of the Person You Wish to Remember

WE WILL SHIP THE BOOK IN TIME FOR DELIVERY . . . . CHRISTMAS MORNING

With a letter telling that the book is sent with your best wishes.

"I have several times been consulted by those who would make a beginning in the Florists' business. In each case I have said that the first step is to subscribe for a Trade Paper, and the next to procure a copy of The Florists' Manual."—J. A. VALENTINE, Pres. Park Floral Co., Denver, Colo.

No dry-as-dust botanical classifications, but tells you just how to produce marketable plants and cut flowers in the best and cheapest way.

TELLS you just what you want to know about every plant that there is any money in for a Commercial Florist.

Treats of over 200 subjects and is freely illustrated with fine half-tone engravings.

Pronouncing Dictionary.
A list of plant names and the botanical terms most frequently met with in articles on trade topics, with the correct pronunciation for each. 25 cents

Plant Breeding.
By L. H. BAILEY. The treatment is both scientific and practical, and will enable gardeners and horticulturists to experiment intelligently in cross-breeding. The subject is fully and clearly elaborated. Cloth. $1.00

The Dahlia.
By LAWRENCE K. PEACOCK. A practical treatise on the habits, characteristics, cultivation and history of the dahlia with a descriptive list of all the best varieties. Copiously and elegantly illustrated. 30 cents

The Florists' Manual.
By WILLIAM SCOTT. Covers the whole field of commercial floriculture. Articles are arranged alphabetically so that reference is quick and easy. It tells you just what you want to know in just the way you want to be told. $5.00

Smith's Chrysanthemum Manual.
By ELMER D. SMITH. Revised edition. A complete practical treatise, concise directions for every stage of the work of propagator and grower. The result of 22 years' experience. Fully illustrated. 40 cents

Gardening for Profit.
By PETER HENDERSON. The standard work on market and family gardening. The successful experience of the author for more than thirty years, and his willingness to tell, as he does in this work, the secret of his success for the benefit of others, enables him to give most valuable information. The book is profusely illustrated. 376 pages. Cloth. $1.50

The Chrysanthemum.
By ARTHUR HERRINGTON, formerly president of Chrysanthemum Society of America. The most complete and comprehensive work on the cultivation of the chrysanthemum that has yet been published in America. The book will be welcomed for the lucid, comprehensive, as well as the practical character of its contents. Handsomely illustrated. 168 pages, 5x7 inches. 50 cents

The History and Culture of Grafted Roses for Forcing.
By ALEX. MONTGOMERY, JR. The most important contribution to the modern literature of the rose. Of much interest to every rose grower and of utmost value to growers of grafted roses. Containing practical description of the process of grafting with full details of planting and culture; also directions for treatment to carry the plants a second year. 25 cents

The Pruning Book.
By L. H. BAILEY. This is the first American work exclusively devoted to pruning. It differs from most other treatises on this subject in that the author takes particular pains to explain the principles of each operation in every detail. Specific advice is given on the pruning of the various kinds of fruits and ornamental trees, shrubs and hedges. Considerable space is devoted to the pruning and training of grape vines, both American and foreign. Cloth, 530 pages. Illustrated. $1.50

Practical Floriculture.
By PETER HENDERSON. An illustrated guide to the successful propagation of florists' plants. A detailed account of the requisites to success and a clear explanation of improved methods. For the amateur and professional florist. 325 pages. Cloth. Postpaid. $1.50

Bulbs and Tuberous Rooted Plants.
By C. L. ALLEN. A complete history, description, methods of propagation and full directions for the successful culture of bulbs in the garden, dwelling or greenhouse. The illustrations which embellish this work, have been drawn from nature, and have been engraved especially for this book. Cloth. $2.00

Gardening for Pleasure.
By PETER HENDERSON. An illustrated guide to the amateur in the fruit, vegetable and flower garden, with full directions for the greenhouse, conservatory and window garden. Technical terms and phrases professional gardeners use in writing or speaking on matters relating to horticulture have been avoided as far as possible. 404 pages. Cloth. $1.50

Insects and Insecticides.
By CLARENCE M. WEED, D. SC. A practical manual concerning noxious insects and the methods of preventing their injuries. Profusely illustrated. A generally useful handbook on noxious insects. It covers the whole field of insect pests very thoroughly and is especially valuable for its complete and up-to-date methods of fighting insects. The work is intensely practical. All the important insect pests are described and remedies for them, and methods of preventing their injuries described in detail. Cloth. $1.50

Henderson's Picturesque Gardens and Ornamental Gardening.
By CHARLES HENDERSON. A volume containing half-tone illustrations of the prettiest and most famous gardens and parks of the world, vividly portraying lawn, garden and landscape effects, plant and tree groupings, decorative bedding, herbaceous gardens and borders, formal gardens, lawn gardens, Italian, Japanese and English gardens, rock gardens, wild gardens, bog gardens, subtropical gardens, sunken and terrace gardens, rosariums, hardy ferneries, arches, columns, festoons, etc., picturesquely draped with vines, as well as numerous other garden embellishments. Each illustration is described and explained. Cloth with gold. $2.50

Greenhouse Management.
By PROF. L. R. TAFT, of Michigan Agricultural College. A manual for florists and flower lovers on the forcing of flowers, vegetables and fruits in greenhouses, and the propagation and care of house plants. It treats of all the plants commonly cultivated by florists and amateurs, and explains in a thorough manner the methods that have been found most successful in growing them. Particular attention is paid to the growing of cut flowers, the growing of fruits under glass, etc. Of special value will be the directions for treating plants when attacked by insects and fungi. The preparation of the soil, the use of various manures, composts and fertilizers, watering, ventilating and heating receive careful and minute attention. Cloth. 400 pages. $1.50

LILY OF THE VALLEY.

Peat Samples.

As a supplement to my article of November 15 on lily of the valley I would like to add some further remarks in the way, to some extent, of a correction to my statements in reference to black peat grown samples.

It may not be generally known that there is heavy, wet peat and also dry, sandy peat. Samples of valley pips grown on the two distinct soils are somewhat different in their nature and require different treatment. After a dry season, like the present, it might have been supposed that these peat samples would do for late forcing. This is proving fairly correct with the samples grown on sandy peat and these same samples also can be used for early forcing, and in fact for forcing from December to April to a certain extent, but in all peat samples it is necessary to continually examine the crown while being heeled in in the open ground, as the following remarks will show.

Previous to this year it has been my experience that after a dry season peat samples were suitable for late forcing. But several samples which have lately come under my notice, in bulk quantities, are already showing signs that they will not keep until the time for late forcing, but must be forced at once; as after they are heeled in in the open ground they are found on examination to be losing all their roots through rot, caused by excessive moisture in the roots.

The one great trouble with these peat samples is excessive moisture in the roots and pips. This causes them in wet years to rot while being stored, awaiting use. It also causes them to badly rot when being forced if they have the slightest oversupply of water. Also when retarded they are liable to more or less rot or mould, this causing the base of the crown to part from the junction of the roots and the roots themselves to get soft.

Judging by the samples I have already tested this year, it is not safe to rely upon even such a dry season as last to reduce the moisture and otherwise produce a normal crown from black, heavy peat. Any grower having a bulk of peat samples on hand will do well to frequently examine them and see that rot and mildew has not set in, whether stored by heeling in in open ground, as is a general practice in England, or whether stored in moss or in the cold storage rooms. H. AMBURGER.

MIGNONETTE.

Since we hear so little about mignonette, are we to infer that it is not a profitable flower to grow for the wholesale market? If it is profitable, why do not more growers grow it? Are there any conditions which make it especially hard to grow? How many good spikes per plant can reasonably be expected for the season extending from November to May? W. K.

We were not aware that so little was said about this humble, sweet flower. We have a neighbor who grows the south bench of a 125-foot house every winter and we are quite sure that he would not persist in growing it if he had any doubt of its being profitable. We have never kept an accurate account of what it returned per square foot of bench room. We consider it quite as profitable as carnations if well grown, with this difference, that you can always sell good carnations while the market for mignonette can be overdone. W. S.

PROPAGATING DAHLIAS.

I would like to know if it would be practical to start dahlias for cuttings on the ground just under the edge of the benches? We have several seedlings and choice varieties that we wish to increase by cuttings as much as possible, and want to know if they will do well under the bench rather than on the bench.
N. H. G.

Yes, it would be possible to start dahlias growing on the edge of the path, beneath the bench, but we would consider it a poor place, as the growth made would be sure to be weak and spindling. It will pay you, whether in a large or small way, to give your dahlias proper surroundings. If you are so short of a few feet of benchroom, then you are attempting to grow more than you have room for and something will be sure to be neglected. You need not begin to grow your dahlias for cutting before February 1, and surely by that time you will have room for them on the bench in the light, the only place for them.

DAVENPORT, IA.

The Tri-City Florists' Association met at the greenhouse of Harry Bills, on North Brown street, December 13, and an interesting session was held, there being a large attendance. The advisability of organizing a horticultural society in the tri-cities was discussed, and it was the opinion of the members that such a society would be a good thing. The society would consist of laymen or parties not engaged in the profession. The Horticultural Society of Chicago gives the big flower show there every year, in charge of the florists of the city.

The questions which were up for general discussion at the meeting were "Roses and their propagation" and "Which are the most profitable bulbs, and their culture." It was also decided to adopt a question box, in which any one, not only members, but laymen as well, may drop in any question relating to floriculture which may come to their notice.

The program committee reported and gave the outline of the program for every month of the ensuing year. The topics which will be taken up during 1907 are as follows:

January—"What are the most profitable plants to grow for Easter trade?"
February—"The making and care of hotbeds. Does it pay to make hotbeds? What are the best plants to grow in hotbeds?"
March—"How is the best way to beautify cities, their lots, boulevards and public places?"
April—"What are the most profitable plants to grow for spring trade?"
May—"Peony culture—What are the best kinds to grow for cut flowers? Does it pay to grow perennials for cut flowers?"
June—"Rose culture—What are the best varieties to grow for the summer months, for the winter months? Does it pay to grow roses out-of-dooors?"
July—"Greenhouse construction—Best material for benches. Which is better for heating, steam or hot water?"
August—"Carnation culture—What are the best varieties to grow? Does it pay to grow carnations for out-of-door or summer blooming?"
September—"What are the best plants to grow for Christmas?"
October—"Ornamental tree and shrub culture—Best trees and shrubs for private grounds—Does it pay to grow hardy roses?"
November—"Chrysanthemum culture — What are the best varieties for commercial use, for pot plants and for cut flowers?"
December—"Heating greenhouses—What is the best and cheapest fuel? How is the best way to decorate show windows?"

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.—Wm. Henry Evans, of the Pike's Peak Floral Co., says business is excellent and that they find themselves cleaned up every night. They now have 85,000 square feet of glass, all in cut flowers for wholesale.

Greenhouse Heating.

A HEATING RECORD.

I have two houses, each 23x100, in which I grow lettuce and general stock. I keep a night temperature 50 to 52 degrees. They are heated with hot water. There are two flows in each house, along the purlins. One 3½-inch pipe supplies six 2-inch pipes under the outside benches and one 3-inch flow supplying four 2-inch pipes under the inside benches. The outlet from each house is separate into the boiler in 5-inch pipe. I had a special boiler made to order that has proved itself beyond my expectations. In the winter of 1905-6 I used thirty-one tons of coal at $1.90 and ten cords of 3-foot wood worth about $2.50 per cord. This I thought very reasonable. The circulation is perfect. Last winter in moderate weather, that is, not windy and outside temperature 20 degrees or so above zero, I would leave the boiler nine hours with a variation of but 3 degrees.

Ten days ago I was called to Cleveland overnight. The outside temperature was 46 degrees at 2:40 p. m., when I left the boiler, with a gradually sinking mercury. There being no men about, I left instructions that the boiler should not be touched until next morning. My wife, on my return next evening, reported that at 7 p. m. it became quite windy and by 9:30 was freezing, with stormy outlook. When she awoke at 6 a. m. the outside temperature was 26 degrees and the greenhouses were 47 degrees. I think this is a record for fifteen hours and twenty minutes without attention. I would like to hear from anyone who can beat it.

VENT PIPE FREEZING.

I have been having trouble with my vent pipe freezing up a time or two, and wish to know how to overcome it. I have a 2½-inch flow pipe with the vent on the highest point. The vent is 1-inch pipe and extends through the roof, but I have it boxed around so it looks as if it should not freeze. S. E. L.

I know of no better way of insuring the vent pipe in question against freezing than to cover it with an asbestos jacket. Such pipe covering can be purchased ready prepared for any size of pipe. This would only require adjusting to the pipe. My plan of meeting this difficulty would be to dispense with the vent pipe altogether, place an airvalve in the system at this point and connect an expansion tank to the main return near the boiler and elevate this several feet, ten or more, above the highest point in the system. This will give you a pressure system which will provide a quicker circulation and a greater heat, thus making the system more efficient.

ELEVATE EXPANSION TANK.

I have a No. 3 Kroeschell hot water boiler with overhead flows and under bench returns, the highest point being farthest from the boiler, and an open tank. How high can I place the expansion tank above the highest point? The boiler is just the ordinary kind, not built for high pressure. The pipe from the expansion tank to the main return is 1½-inch and connects with the return to the boiler, which is 4-inch. The boiler is six feet under the floor level. Is the expansion pipe in the right place and is the size of pipe all right? The boiler heats about 8,000 square feet of glass. At present the tank is only about five feet above the highest point and is enclosed on top of the shed over the boiler.

F. W. H.

The boiler you have will easily stand fifteen or twenty pounds pressure. In order to make fifteen pounds pressure on the boiler it would be necessary to have the expansion tank raised thirty-three feet. This is probably not practicable, but you can undoubtedly elevate it ten or twelve feet higher without great inconvenience or expense. This will help to maintain a considerably higher heat on the system. While I do not think the point at which the expansion tank pipe is taken off the ideal one, yet I do not know that it would be enough better in the ideal place to justify the change. The ideal place is on the main return within eight or ten inches of the boiler. The size of the pipe is greater than is necessary. A ¾-inch pipe would be large enough, although the greater size is no disadvantage. The incline in the pipe makes no difference. The perpendicular height is the all-important point and it makes no difference whether the tank is directly over the boiler or at one side as you have it. L. C. C.

Topeka, Kan.—Mrs. J. E. Lord has arranged a new flower room at her store at 112 West Eighth avenue. It is a tastefully arranged reception room, decorated with palms, ferns and blooming plants.

LENOX, MASS.

The regular meeting of the Lenox Horticultural Society was held December 15, President F. Heeremans in the chair. Alexander Murray, of Lenox, was elected a member. It was decided to hold three exhibitions this year, viz.: Rose and strawberry in June, an annual and perennial show in August and the chrysanthemum show in October. All committees for 1907 were appointed; employment, essay and entertainment, schedule and judges for plants and indoor flowers, herbaceous plants and outdoor flowers and vegetables. G. F.

NEWPORT, R. I.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club held its annual election of officers December 11 and re-elected the secretaries, treasurer and sergeant-at-arms. The new list stands thus: President, Bruce Butterton; first vice-president, Samuel Spear; second vice-president, James Robertson; recording secretary, David McIntosh; financial secretary, Joseph Gibson; treasurer, K. MacMahon; sergeant-at-arms, W. J. Smith. The reports for the year are highly encouraging and speak volumes for the interest taken by the craft. Mr. Butterton, the newly elected president, is gardener to E. J. Berwind and has shown considerable skill as a landscape architect in both designing and carrying out the fine work recently done on the estate.

Following the election there were refreshments and speechmaking. The program was rudely interrupted by the alarm of fire which proved to be in a hardware store directly opposite. The meeting, which was the largest for the year, was broken up by many of the members pitching in to assist in putting out the fire. W. M.

HOUSTON, TEX.—M. V. Wright, who for the last year has been touring along the Pacific coast, has returned. He thinks that San Diego, Cal., is the ideal residence city on the coast and seriously considers making that place his future home.

Greenhouse Heating.

A HEATING RECORD.

I have two houses, each 23x100, in which I grow lettuce and general stock. I keep a night temperature 50 to 52 degrees. They are heated with hot water. There are two flows in each house, along the purlins. One 3½-inch pipe supplies six 2-inch pipes under the outside benches and one 3-inch flow supplying four 2-inch pipes under the inside benches. The outlet from each house is separate into the boiler in 5-inch pipe. I had a special boiler made to order that has proved itself beyond my expectations. In the winter of 1905-6 I used thirty-one tons of coal at $1.90 and ten cords of 3-foot wood worth about $2.50 per cord. This I thought very reasonable. The circulation is perfect. Last winter in moderate weather, that is, not windy and outside temperature 20 degrees or so above zero, I would leave the boiler nine hours with a variation of but 3 degrees.

Ten days ago I was called to Cleveland overnight. The outside temperature was 46 degrees at 2:40 p. m., when I left the boiler, with a gradually sinking mercury. There being no men about, I left instructions that the boiler should not be touched until next morning. My wife, on my return next evening, reported that at 7 p. m. it became quite windy and by 9:30 was freezing, with stormy outlook. When she awoke at 6 a. m. the outside temperature was 26 degrees and the greenhouses were 47 degrees. I think this is a record for fifteen hours and twenty minutes without attention. I would like to hear from anyone who can beat it.

VENT PIPE FREEZING.

I have been having trouble with my vent pipe freezing up a time or two, and wish to know how to overcome it. I have a 2½-inch flow pipe with the vent on the highest point. The vent is 1-inch pipe and extends through the roof, but I have it boxed around so it looks as if it should not freeze. S. E. L.

I know of no better way of insuring the vent pipe in question against freezing than to cover it with an asbestos jacket. Such pipe covering can be purchased ready prepared for any size of pipe. This would only require adjusting to the pipe. My plan of meeting this difficulty would be to dispense with the vent pipe altogether, place an airvalve in the system at this point and connect an expansion tank to the main return near the boiler and elevate this several feet, ten or more, above the highest point in the system. This will give you a pressure system which will provide a quicker circulation and a greater heat, thus making the system more efficient.

ELEVATE EXPANSION TANK.

I have a No. 3 Kroeschell hot water boiler with overhead flows and under bench returns, the highest point being farthest from the boiler, and an open tank. How high can I place the expansion tank above the highest point? The boiler is just the ordinary kind, not built for high pressure. The pipe from the expansion tank to the main return is 1½-inch and connects with the return to the boiler, which is 4-inch. The boiler is six feet under the floor level. Is the expansion pipe in the right place and is the size of pipe all right? The boiler heats about 8,000 square feet of glass. At present the tank is only about five feet above the highest point and is enclosed on top of the shed over the boiler.

F. W. H.

The boiler you have will easily stand fifteen or twenty pounds pressure. In order to make fifteen pounds pressure on the boiler it would be necessary to have the expansion tank raised thirty-three feet. This is probably not practicable, but you can undoubtedly elevate it ten or twelve feet higher without great inconvenience or expense. This will help to maintain a considerably higher heat on the system. While I do not think the point at which the expansion tank pipe is taken off the ideal one, yet I do not know that it would be enough better in the ideal place to justify the change. The ideal place is on the main return within eight or ten inches of the boiler. The size of the pipe is greater than is necessary. A ¾-inch pipe would be large enough, although the greater size is no disadvantage. The incline in the pipe makes no difference. The perpendicular height is the all-important point and it makes no difference whether the tank is directly over the boiler or at one side as you have it. L. C. C.

Topeka, Kan.—Mrs. J. E. Lord has arranged a new flower room at her store at 112 West Eighth avenue. It is a tastefully arranged reception room, decorated with palms, ferns and blooming plants.

NEW ORLEANS.

Current Comment.

The first annual convention of the Society of Southern Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists will take place in New Orleans February 13 to 15, 1907, or the days following Mardi Gras. The different committees appointed are at work doing their best to have every detail in a proper shape. As we have noted previously, it will be conducted as other conventions, with an exhibition of plants, flowers and requisites. It will certainly accomplish the same good results that northern conventions accomplish and no doubt the opening meeting will be largely attended.

Louis Sieber, secretary of the Metairie Ridge Nursery Co., Ltd., has accepted a position of manager of a large establishment at Ponchatoula, La., on the I. C. R. R. The place is owned by Chicago parties and consists of four greenhouses, 200 feet long, just erected, with latest improvements and heated by a Kroeschell boiler. It is entirely devoted to cucumbers to be forced and shipped north.

The Gardeners' Mutual Protective Association held its annual election of officers December 15 and the following were elected for the coming year: President, Louis Keintz; vice-president, Andrew Klees; treasurer, John Kuehl; grand marshal, C. R. Panter; guardian, Mr. Skelhofer.

The Abele Bros. have received the sad news of the death of their aged father, who died in Germany. They have the sympathy of the craft. M. M. L.

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y.

The regular meeting of the Dobbs Ferry Horticultural Association was held in its room in Odd Fellows' hall, Saturday evening, December 8, President Dunbar in the chair. There was a prize for the best fern in not larger than a 6-inch pot, which was awarded to H. Keiling for a Nephrolepis Piersoni in a 4-inch pot. It was a fine plant for so small a pot. R. Boreham staged a collection of new geraniums, some of which were the finest it has been our pleasure to see. He was awarded a cultural certificate. T. A. Lees and J. Bradley were the judges. J. Bradley staged some fine mushrooms from pure culture spawn. Joseph Dunbar, gardener to Mr. Payton, gave an interesting talk on the "Culture of Mushrooms." Mr. Dunbar is an expert on the culture of mushrooms. There is a prize offered for the best six carnations to be competed for at our next regular meeting. The nomination of officers for the coming year then took place. Joseph Dunbar was nominated without opposition to succeed himself as president, H. Kastberg for secretary, Claud Wilson for treasurer, H. Keiling and R. Boreham for vice-presidents, and J. Bradley for corresponding secretary.

FALL RIVER, MASS.

Chatterton Warburton annually grows quite a batch of the Otaheite orange. He propagates cuttings early, pots into 2½-inch pots, then transplants into the field. During the summer he pinches the plants while making growth; then, in the fall, he pots up into 6-inch pots. They fruit the second year. He says this is no secret as he disposes of all he can find room for, at retail. His store early took on a holiday appearance, being filled with suitable stock.

George Smith is picking fine carnations at his place on Peckham street. He says there is nothing like having a farm for summer planting.

Frank Buffington handles a large variety of stock and is one of the few who grow camellias profitably. W. M.

ONE insertion of our advertisement in the REVIEW sold all the cinerarias we had ready.—RAY H. PALMER, Randolph, N. Y.

WE have received orders from Pennsylvania on the east to Washington on the Pacific coast from our advertisement in the REVIEW.—W. C. HILL FLORAL CO., Streator, Ill., Dec. 3, 1906.

Here is what Thomas Proctor, superintendent for R. W. Paterson, Lenox, Mass., says about U-Bar houses: "So far as the style of construction is concerned, I believe that the U-Bar type is as much superior to the very best type of the ordinary iron frame construction as the iron frame houses are to the old wooden sashbar houses." Send for new catalog and know why they are so "much superior." Pierson U-Bar Company, Designers and Builders of U-Bar Greenhouses, Metropolitan Building, 4th Avenue and 23rd Street, New York.

BACKED UP

It's interesting reading some of the things advertisers talk about, but the backing up of the talk is a good bit more interesting. When we do talk about a thing it has actually been severely tried out—it's a fact not a theory. We insist on talking facts—selling facts. We are after the man who wants the right house at the right price and who thinks pleasant dealing is worth something.

The Test of QUALITY

CYPRESS is conceded by all authorities to be the best wood for greenhouse construction and quite a little has been said about the "right kind of cypress." What way have you of knowing the "right kind of cypress?" Can you tell by looking at a cypress plank just where the sap lies and what kind it is?

One way to be sure that you get the "right kind" of cypress, is to place your order with a firm that makes a test of every piece before shipping, and employs an expert to detect cypress defects. Send for "Why Use Cypress" and "The Mummy's Case."

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Longiflorums.

It is high time now to bring in your Japan lilies that are wanted in flower at Easter. Some may say it is late. If they have been protected by a covering of litter and shutters or sash, to keep out severe frost, the lilies are as well out in a frame as indoors, because they have been making roots and will be in right condition to endure a good strong heat from New Year's on to Easter.

Give them a week or ten days in a night temperature of 50 degrees. After that raise the temperature 10 degrees and never let it drop, even for a few hours. The last four weeks before Easter you can do the most effectual forcing. A drop of a few degrees in temperature will stunt a lily more than any plant I know of, so once you raise to 60 degrees at night and 70 degrees in daytime keep it steadily at that.

Tulips.

Tulips can now be brought in for earliest cutting. La Reine, Vermilion Brilliant, Yellow Prince, Cottage Maid and Proserpine will all flower satisfactorily from now on. I have had occasion to mention recently the conditions best suited to flower them. It is simply a top heat of 80 degrees to 85 degrees, a spraying and watering daily and a heavy shade a foot or so above the flats to draw up the stems. Without this shade the flowers will open close to the surface of the flats and be useless. What is known as bottom heat, or heat at the roots, is not at all necessary with tulips, but they must have a strong heat around their leaves and flower buds or the growth will be stunted and the flower abortive. Few of us have a house especially constructed for this, but it will take only a little ingenuity to contrive some means of employing the heat of the pipes beneath the bench on the growth of the tulips. Nor is the shading hard to manage.

Lily of the Valley.

Last fall's importation of lily of the valley will force readily from now on. This little flower requires quite different treatment from tulips and narcissi. The latter should have an abundance of roots, and the roots require only the heat of the house, while a greater heat is needed to develop the foliage and flower. The valley makes scarcely any roots while being forced, yet they need a high temperature at the roots to induce them to develop their foliage and flower, and the top heat need be only the temperature of the house. The sand in which the roots of valley are inserted should be 85 degrees and the top heat may be 60 degrees. This is for the first month or two. As the time of natural flowering approaches less bottom heat is required, but the top heat never should be over 60 degrees.

Dahlias.

In a rose house temperature, where you have a vacant bench with five inches of soil, you might plant some roots of single, pompon or cactus dahlias. If planted at once you will cut flowers by the middle of April, and from then on in abundance. There are a number of varieties suitable for the purpose, but one of the best and most prolific is the single Twentieth Century, a grand flower, with a fine long stem. I know of no difficulty in growing dahlias under glass, except the common green aphis, which is easily kept down by any of the liquid nicotine solutions, applied with the compressed-air bellows; and, perhaps, red spider in May or June, which is kept in subjection by the hose and pure water, applied with a pressure of seventy-five pounds to the square inch.

Freesias.

Plant a few more pans of freesia. They will not flower much before Easter. Instead of pots, put fifteen bulbs in a 6-inch pan. They are beautiful, sweet flowers, and when thick with blossoms are attractive to all, but when only a few bulbs are planted are thin and not attractive. WILLIAM SCOTT.

TO PROPAGATE HYDRANGEAS.

Would hardwood cuttings of Hydrangea grandiflora be much more likely to grow if started in sandy soil in pots next spring than if set out in the open ground? J. L. D.

The way to propagate Hydrangea grandiflora from hard wood is to cut off the growths of last summer and keep them in a cool cellar, with the ends of the cuttings in moist sand or sandy loam till next April, when the cuttings can be made into pieces of three eyes and put into beds of a light soil.

Another method of propagating the useful shrub is to take off the young growths in June and insert them in three inches of sand in a hotbed, which must be kept close and shaded for two weeks, gradually admitting air. As you give ventilation increase the water. They will be rooted in four or five weeks and in two months from the time of putting in the cuttings the sash of the hotbed can be entirely removed and the rooted cuttings can be planted out in nursery rows the following September. Most of our hardy shrubs can be propagated in this way. W. S.

THE CRAFT AND THE CRAFTSMAN

Choice of a Craft.

Some men succeed in every business and every legitimate avocation, while some others do not succeed in those same pursuits, under equally favorable conditions. The difference, therefore, between success and failure does not necessarily lie in the craft, but in the craftsman himself. This is axiomatic—a self-evident truth. And it is equally true that no man, however successful he may be, or may have been, in one department of our many-sided activities, will succeed equally well in every other, or any other.

It is, then, of the greatest importance, that every man selects for his craft that which he likes, and likes because of his adaptability thereto. It is my good fortune this evening to address a company of gentlemen who have chosen their craft and are in the earnest pursuit of it. The production of fruits, vegetables and flowers, the decoration of the home, the lawn and the landscape, is an avocation worthy of the best there is in the best of men.

Your field of activity is broad—so broad that the man has not yet been born who can say, with any approximation to truthfulness, he has mastered it. This fact alone makes your calling one of peculiar interest to a thoughtful man. Mother Earth is so full of mystery, and delights so often in doing the unexpected, that one is kept ever on the alert. He knows that the unexpected is sure to happen. Then again, Nature guards so jealously the citadel of her secrets, that only observing mortals are allowed to profit from her. The wisest of men succeed only by the most careful observation and practical, persistent application.

Conditions Must be Considered.

Every plant has its own peculiarities, it will succeed in one soil and will not in another. It must have its own conditions complied with or no returns are given. Nothing is more capricious and nothing is more exacting than a living plant, and the higher the order, the more exacting its demands. Hence, the soil, the temperature and all the conditions that have to do with the plant, must be reckoned with before the actual work of production has been begun. The man who does not carefully consider this feature of his problem, acts the part of the man who builds his house upon the sand, without giving due regard to the foundation thereof. Disastrous consequences are sure to follow.

The time was, when people in general thought that the boy who was stupid in his books, not capable of making a lawyer, or a doctor, or a minister, would do to make a cultivator of the soil. But the time has come when men realize that it takes as good brains to compel Nature to give her best, as to do anything else that is worth the doing. It is one thing to cultivate the soil, it is another to compel Nature to do her best.

An address by W. H. Wyman, of the Bay State Nurseries, North Abington, Mass., read before the Boston Gardeners' and Florists' Club, December 18, 1906.

Latent Possibilities.

The wonderful possibilities that are resident in a handful of seed, or a single seed, is a consideration of no mean proportion. How much of human history may be connected with the product of a single seed? The little acorn that you so thoughtlessly throw into the soil may bring forth a plant that shall grow for a hundred years, and men may come for generations to it for shelter and protection. It then may have attained such proportions that it will serve as a keel to a great vessel that does business in all seas, among the nations.

The possibilities that lie in a block of marble are seen to those only who have eyes to see. In that block of marble the sculptor sees, in dim outline, a form. It grows more beautiful as he meditates, until at last, a creation of graceful mould and of angelic expression stands before his vision, for the liberation of which he devotes his energies. Days lengthen into months, and months into years, but he is unmindful of them so intent is he on his work. No, that is not the word. It is work, but that does not express it. It is rather the giving expression of himself. It is a travail of soul, a mental birth.

The product of his genius is almost a thing of life. It was in the block of marble, was it? Yes, and no. To the one man, yes; to the other man, no. More exactly, it was in the mind of the one, it was not in the mind of the other, until the one had revealed it to the other.

So it must be in every field of human activity. The boy, yes, the man, must see visions and dream dreams, always with his eyes open. The merchant lived in that poor boy we saw some years ago, back there on the farm. We did not see him—the merchant—but the boy we saw was looking him squarely in the face all the while. We saw the boy. It was Abe, or Jim or Dan. But Abe saw Abraham Lincoln (as a young man he confessed as much) striking the shackles from millions of slaves. Jim saw James Garfield meeting the unexpected, whatever turn it took; the spirit was living within him, waiting for the occasion. The occasion came and he was there, because Jim was acquainted with James and knew he could be depended upon in an emergency. The old saying is quite true, "the boy is father of the man." The principle holds good in every craft or vocation in life.

The Law of Harmony.

The man who would succeed in this department of human activity must understand well the external elements with which he has to deal. He must see the possibilites vested in a tiny seed, the possibilities in a stretch of wild, unbroken landscape, or a mound of broken rocks. The gardener must have the imagination of the poet, the fine discrimination of the artist. He must not only produce the material, but he must see that the material is arranged so that there shall be no "war among the roses"—no clashing among the flowers.

We have all been in gardens where there was a profusion of beautiful flowers, looked at individually, and yet there was, in reality, little if anything, to admire. On the other hand, we have visited gardens where there were only a limited number of plants, of very common sorts, and we were enchanted by them; common every-day plants and flowers, but so beautiful! They all seemed made for each other, and were so arranged that they were a harmonious feature of the landscape, each one doing duty to the whole.

We have not far to look for the reason for all this. It is that which, in one woman, makes her never well dressed, even if she is clothed in silks and adorned with diamonds. It is that which makes another woman well dressed, even if the fabric grew in the fields of Alabama, and was woven in Lawrence, and unadorned. On this line we might continue indefinitely, but it is not necessary. Is it necessary for me to say that the shepherd must love his sheep, the gunner his gun and the plantsman his plants?

Azalea Firefly, a Popular Christmas Plant at Boston.

Not a Question of Money.

Let us now turn from the work to the workman himself. The sordid question of dollars and cents concerns all of us, for food, shelter and raiment we must have. But the man who never gets above the money standpoint of his calling never gets far toward success in the highest degree. It is the man who becomes engrossed in his work and thinks not of the pay who is doubly paid.

The genius in his craft is the man who has so much in his soul seeking expression that, work hard as he may, he never quite catches up with himself. There is more yet seeking expression and he rejoices every new day for the opportunity of working out that which is pleading for expression from within. A sense of duty well done is in itself a rich reward, and he who does his full duty is sure of substantial remuneration. Elbert Hubbard says: "Folks who never do any more than they get paid for, never get paid for any more than they do."

A Broad Field.

Look over the whole catalogue of trades and professions and tell me which one has a broader range of subjects than has your calling. Contrast your breadth of vision with that of those who toil in factories. The factory operative stands before a machine year after year doing the same thing, no better and no faster than he could do it at the end of the first six months of his service there. His movements are almost as automatic as are those of the machine, of which he seems to be almost a part. Dangers are so many that his mind must be constantly on his work. He cannot think of other things. Not so with you. Your work invites thought, deep, long continued and profound. The book of nature, always open before us, invites our thought. And the more thoroughly we read out the thought of nature, the more nearly right we are doing our work. But it must not be forgotten that nature reveals no secrets to those who think they know it all.

Victory won gives fresh zest to the victor on every field of conflict. And so, as thoughtful men advance they find no day hanging heavily on their hands. They are borne on by a mighty rushing tide of events. The days are all too short, the seasons pass too quickly. The man had been toiling but he knew it not, for he had not watched the hands on the dial, but nature for her secrets—thinking after God his thoughts. Such craftsmen may grow infirm of body because of advancing years, but never does the man grow old. He grows rich and reverent and profound. Hundreds of such noblemen we have seen.

Ennobling Influences.

No priest at the altar deals with anything purer than the flowers—the handiwork of God. And he who has part in their creation should feel the dignity of his calling so that none should be found more child-like in straightforward simplicity than he. We must not forget that there are some exceptions, and in some instances, as in Latin, sometimes we thought the exceptions were more general than the rules. How out of place is a man of low designs and unbridled passions in a bower of pure fragrant flowers. How a man of coarse, unwholesome speech disfigures the landscape. How out of keeping with his surroundings a man looks who has no regard for his personal appearance, who allows himself to go unshaven and unwashed. One feels to say with Hamlet, when he heard the coarse jokes of the clown, "Has this fellow no sense of his business that he sings at grave-making?" The true man sees purity in the dew-drops, hears music in the wind as it plays in the branches above his head, and breathes the fragrance of the flowers.

The craft elevates, refines and enobles the craftsman in this your chosen field. It cannot be otherwise. Let me not be misunderstood. I am speaking of the real craftsman, the man inside the clothes we see, whom the world can never see only as he is revealed by the work which he does.

On this line there was a man who spoke thus of himself: "The works that I do, they testify of me." And with as much truth we can each say the same words. It is not true of all gardeners, or of all florists, that they are pure of character, chaste in speech and temperate in habit. But it is true of many of them. They are among nature's noblemen. The craft is full of inspiration; but, as in all other walks of life, some go at cross purposes with the tendency of their calling.

Inspiration and its Source.

Not all who paint pictures are artists; not all who build houses are architects; not all who play on musical instruments are musicians; but those who paint pictures that survive are artists; those who design massive structures, which combine strength, grace and beauty for the happiness and convenience of man, are architects; and those who compel the organ to give forth such melodious sounds as to convulse our natures and make the best there is in us wage war with the worst there is in us, are musicians.

What great work can the world produce that was inspired by the sordid, stupid stuff we call dollars? Not one. The inspiration came from a higher plain. There is much in this world that is sordid, but it is not all sordid; much that is bad, but it is not all bad. Because some politician is constantly looking for graft, no reasonably honest man, for a moment, thinks that is true of all politicians. The true man has no itching palm, but he has the burning ambition to give expression to the thought and purpose within. He becomes intensely interested in his work.

When once a man becomes absorbed in some great and noble undertaking, he wakes to a realization of the fact that he is experiencing the happiest moment of his life. He then, it may be for the first time, realizes that Jesus knew whereof he spoke when he said, "He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake"—for a great, good and mighty purpose—"shall find it."

Ideals in Business.

A man goes into business and to some it seems all sordid, and selfish and mean. There are some who always live in the lowlands intellectually and morally. They cannot appreciate the man who lives upon the highlands, in wholesome air, healthful surroundings, and in God's sunshine. But business is not all sordid and mean. It is what you make it. Your craft is, in character, what you make it. My business is all right. If it is base and sordid it is because the man behind the gun is base and sordid.

The highest ideal known to man is service. The apostle Paul in his letters often spoke of himself as a slave of his master, as one that serves. He who serves his fellows most faithfully is himself most faithfully served. He that sows sparingly reaps sparingly.

Gentlemen, I must not weary you, but allow me to congratulate you that you are all servants. Some are serving in a public capacity, others in a private, but we are all servants, and he serves best who lives the purest, strives most intelligently and acts the best.

The Scope of the Horticulturist.

And in closing let us look for a brief moment at the scope of your labors. You may possibly have moments when you take a narrow view of the worth of your calling. You may see the flowers wither and decay, the vegetables eaten and gone, and you may say there is no permanent value as a result of your toil. But if that were all, it were no mean thing. The flowers served their purpose; they gladdened human hearts; they brought sunshine into many a sick chamber. The vegetables you produced gave nourishment and health to busy workers of hand and brain. Their work could not have been done as well but for your work. This is the nearer view of the situation.

There is a broader outlook. Coming generations will eat fruit from the trees your hands have planted long years after you are gone. Thousands and tens of thousands of earth's weary sons and daughters will sit beneath the strong arms of the oaks and the elms and the maples that you have planted and refresh their wearied bodies. Happy child life will voice a psalm of praise to their unknown benefactor.

Permanency of the Work.

Soon your names will be forgotten but your work will long remain. In a measure it will be true of you as it was of those who fell at Gettysburg, whose great work was summed up in a few well chosen words by President Lincoln, "In a large sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here."

But this is not all. Trees, like fruits and flowers, have their day. The end comes some time. The fashion of this world changes. Is there nothing more permanent that you have done? Yes, for many of you have changed the very face of nature. You have taken a rough, unsightly stretch of country and converted it into a veritable paradise of beauty. With pick and shovel, instead of the palette and brush you have wrought a picture, a dream of beauty, which will be more and more highly prized by men and women for a thousand generations.

But does not this mark the end of the sphere of influence of your craft? By no means. The great soul of the artist lives forever in the souls of men inspired by his touch. Shakespeare said, "The evil men do lives after them, while the good is oft interred with their bones," and as truthfully can it be said of great and good men in every walk in life. The good men do lives after them. Your life and mine in the final analysis will be worth just what good we can do, the service we can render in our time. This is the great goal of life, the prize to be coveted, the end to be sought.

Lives of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime
And, departing, leave behind us,
Footprints on the sands of time.

Footprints that perhaps another
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother
Seeing, may take hope again.

Let us then be up and doing
With a heart for any fate.
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Potting the Cuttings.

Having succeeded in getting a good percentage of the cuttings to take root, they should be potted as soon as they have formed a nice tuft of rootlets. You will find that by the time the most tardy ones are rooted the majority of the batch will be in proper shape for potting. They should not be allowed to remain in the sand long after they are ready to pot.

The one thing you must bear in mind, from the time you put the cuttings into the sand until you plant them into the houses next summer, is that these cuttings are your next season's stock and nothing is too good for them. Many growers are inclined to harbor the idea that anything is good enough for the young plants and that if they can plant fairly good plants into the field they can make up any deficiency during the summer. When late planting was the rule and the plants had a long growing season this could often be done to some extent. But these days, when the plants remain in the field a bare three months and every day should be taken up by development rather than recuperation, it becomes imperative that you plant out strong, sturdy plants that are ready to go right ahead. During the next four months the tendency to neglect is stronger than at any other period of the plant's development.

Use Good Soil.

To begin with, use good soil to pot the cuttings into. Don't use old chrysanthemum soil, as we see done so often. Just because this soil has lots of manure in it and it looks light and mellow is no reason why it is good. Use the same soil you used on your carnation benches, or as good, and mix in about one-fifth more of well-rotted manure, and a shovelful of sharp sand to each bushel of the mixture. Screen this through a ½-inch mesh as you use it. Don't screen a big lot and let it lie, but screen what your potting bench will hold and will be used up in a few days. It will be in better mechanical condition.

Cuttings that are potted during the next six weeks should be potted into 2-inch pots and shifted later into a larger size, according to the strength of the plants. If potted into 2½-inch pots this early and left in those pots until planted in the field they would be stunted and hard and would never make high-grade stock. The one thing to strive for is a moderate, sturdy, steady growth from beginning to end.

Potting an Art.

There is more art in potting plants than appears on the surface, and especially if speed is desired as well as good work. All expert potters have a system by which they work and when everything is as it should be a good potter will work like a clock and as smoothly. Every move he makes has its place in the system, and no unnecessary move is made to cause a loss of time. Speed does not necessarily mean a low grade of work. In fact, you will frequently find that the fastest one in a bunch of potters will be doing the best grade of work. The man who keeps both hands busy all the time and moves his hands quickly, eliminating all unnecessary movements, will do just as good work as the slower mover and will do more of it.

The Routine of Potting.

The system we teach every man who pots on our place is as follows: Place the pots at the left hand and have the soil in a convenient pile close against the pots and to the right. Place the tray on top of the soil and close to the pots and let the end next to the pots be a few inches lower than the other end. This is done to aid in setting the pots into the tray quickly and to prevent falling over. You will quickly see the advantage in this. As to the cuttings, a convenient handful at a time is placed next to the pots in the triangle of space, made by clearing a small space for working, directly in front of the potter. You will notice that everything is in close proximity, to make every movement as short as possible. Every time you have to lean over to reach or to turn around it causes a waste of time and it tires you, but under this system the potter stands erect and moves only his arms and hands.

Now to pot the cuttings: Grasp a pot in the left hand and simultaneously brush the loose soil away with the back of your right hand, then pick up a cutting with the left hand and at the same time scoop up a handful of soil in the right hand. Both hands come together at the pot, the left hand a trifle in advance and holding the roots in the pot as deep as they are to be and giving a slight shake to make them hang naturally. The soil is filled in around them and a thumb on each side presses the soil down, and by a quick change the remaining two sides are pressed, also with the thumbs, without moving the pot. In picking up the pot with the right hand it is given a slight twirl and knock on the bench and quickly placed in the tray. While the right hand is doing this the left hand is reaching for another pot, ready to set down as soon as the right has cleared a space. Under this system the work is so well divided that, except for mishap, neither hand will need to wait for the other at any time, and that is where the saving in time comes in.

The Question of Speed.

We have seen men pot in many different ways, but have never seen a system that would allow such speed and clean work as this one. How many plants can a good potter pot in a day under this system, do you ask? To begin with, I would say that expert potters who have speed, etc., usually have their pots brought to them and the plants set away for them and when several are potting even the cuttings are taken up for them. All they need to do is to pot and a few other trifling things around the potting bench. Any active man under these conditions should pot not less than 5,000 2-inch pots in ten hours and 6,000 is not too many to expect, and good work should be done. I am not speaking now of any attempt toward making a record, but a day's work for weeks or months at a time. This may not seem of great importance to the smaller grower who plants 5,000 or 10,000 young plants each year, but I claim it is.

While you may, most of the time, be able to get through your work without undue haste, yet every grower knows that there are times when time is everything, and I claim that a majority of growers waste more time on their potting than they do on anything else in the routine of greenhouse work. And during potting time there is plenty to do. To adopt a system like this does not necessarily mean working at top speed unless you are so inclined, but it does mean a maximum of good work for a minimum of effort.

Allow for Water.

Don't fill the pots too full, but allow for watering. There should be a scant quarter-inch below the edge of a 2-inch pot to hold water when it is soaking into the soil, else if the soil once gets dry you cannot soak it through again. This is a mistake made too often by beginners. As soon as set into the house they should be watered, but I will have more to say on this subject next week.

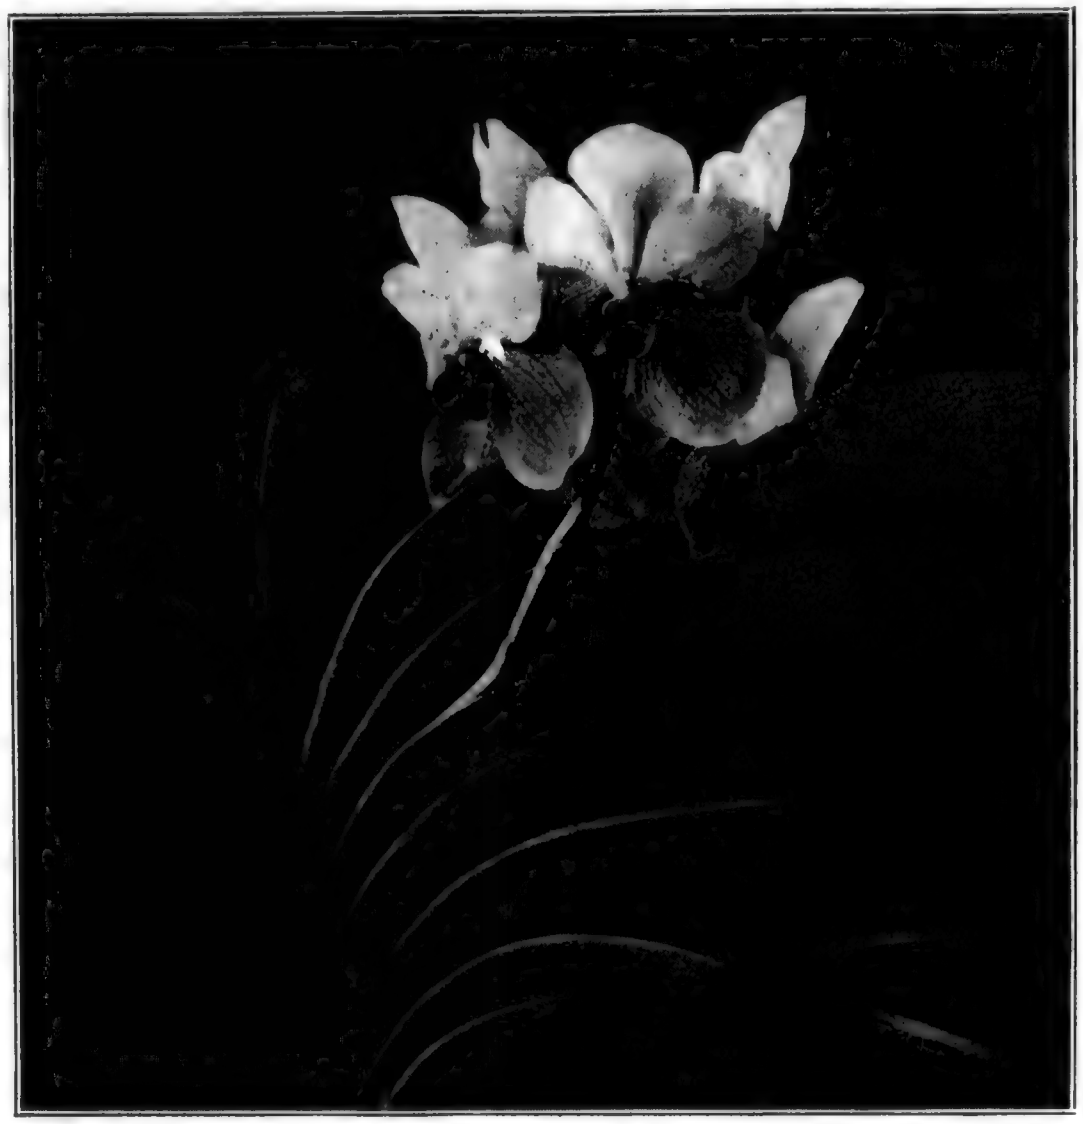
TEMPERATURE.

At what temperature shall I run my greenhouse to get the best results for Enchantress, Vesper and Mrs. Lawson? What is their appearance when overfed? A. G. B.



You will find a night temperature of 52 degrees about as satisfactory as you can get for the varieties you name. Enchantress prefers 50 degrees while Mrs. Lawson prefers 55 degrees. Vesper likes about 52 degrees. On cloudy days raise the temperature about 6 degrees and on sunny days raise it 10 to 15 degrees with some ventilation.

When carnations are overfed the blooms will become soft and will not keep any length of time. On some varieties the blooms will lose their natural form and will look ragged, frequently splitting the calyx. The plants, too, will look over-rank and soft and will wilt easily. While it is not easy to explain to a beginner all the symptoms so he will understand, yet to an experienced grower it is like an open book. He can detect it immediately he looks over the plants. A. F. J. B.

TOBACCO STEM ASHES.

Of what value are the ashes of tobacco stems to carnations and what is the principal chemical substance contained in these ashes? L. L.

You can use ashes made from tobacco stems about the same as you would hardwood ashes. Both of these are especially rich in potash and are used for that property. It strengthens the stems and toughens the fibre of the plant. Like lime, it will also free other plant foods contained in the soil and you will notice, after an application, a renewed vigor in the plants. As with all chemicals, it must not be used too freely. We have seen it cause the stems on some varieties to become so brittle that they would snap at the joints from the mere weight of the blooms. A light application once each month or six weeks is enough as a rule. A. F. J. B.

Vanda Sanderiana.

THRIPS.

I enclose a bud of Lady Bountiful. The carnations appear to be all right when forming, then torn like this one. Can you tell the cause and the remedy. L. A. D.

We have noticed this same thing on Lady Bountiful early in the fall, before the plants were well established and when the blooms were coming single. We have always attributed it to thrips and think they are likely at the bottom of your trouble. Later on, when the blooms began to come more double and after we had sprayed them regularly for a few weeks, it disappeared entirely. You do not say what date your carnations were planted, so I cannot be sure that your plants will naturally outgrow it. If they were planted much later than September 1 you will likely be troubled in this way until the days begin to get longer and the plants get into a strong growth, when the blooms will be full and well formed. Spray them regularly with one of the tobacco preparations to keep down aphis and thrips.

CARNATION EXHIBITS.

George H. Mills, who is to be superintendent of the approaching Toronto exhibition of the American Carnation Society, requests exhibitors to ship all parcels by the Canadian Express Co. at frontier points, Suspension Bridge, N. Y.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Detroit and Port Huron, Mich., as he thinks this will assist in getting quick delivery.

VANDA SANDERIANA.

This rather striking vanda is not much seen in orchid collections. A native of the Philippines, it was introduced in 1881. The flowers are large, four to five inches in diameter and flat. The dorsal sepal and small petals are pink, stained with buff, the lower pair tawny yellow varied with brownish crimson. The small lip is purplish-red at the base, the top being chocolate.

Unlike V. cærulea, this vanda enjoys tropical heat and the winter minimum should not fall below 60 to 65 degrees. Baskets are best for its culture, fern fiber and sphagnum being suitable rooting mediums. The flowering period is October and November. While a picturesque variety, this will never become plentiful enough to be of any commercial value. W. N. C.

THE GLASS MARKET.

It is the general prediction among well-informed jobbers in window glass that prices will shortly be higher; indeed, an advance of five per cent is anticipated within a few days. Lester C. Partridge, of Sharp, Partridge & Co., Chicago, says that prices will undoubtedly be much firmer from now on and A. L. LeVaque, of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., agrees that those who defer buying will have to pay higher prices for their supplies. Incidentally, prices now are not low but the glass trade says they are low compared to the prices of other commodities. Both Mr. LeVaque and Mr. Partridge report that there is every indication of a greater demand for greenhouse sizes than ever has been known. They say that inquiry is beginning earlier than usual and that buyers are asking for prices on larger average lots than is usually the case. Incidentally it is noteworthy that they are figuring on a number of big lots for large growers for the Chicago market.

Mr. LeVaque says that greenhouse owners do not understand the difficulty which attends procuring supplies of greenhouse sizes. The florist does not appreciate that the glass-blowers are paid higher wages for making the larger sizes of glass and that, therefore, there is a natural disinclination on the part of the workmen to cut the greenhouse sizes. The significance of this lies in the fact that there are more glass factories than there are glass-blowers to operate them and naturally the employer must keep his men at work on the sizes that pay the workmen best or see them desert his factory for one where they can get employment on the sizes that bring the workers the most money.

Another point is that the recent organization of glass manufacturers purposes to end the season's fire not later than May 15, which is fully six weeks earlier than usual. There appears little likelihood of any considerable accumulation of greenhouse sizes before that date and it is quite possible that next autumn will see the market bare of greenhouse sizes.

Little glass is now being imported because the Belgian glass-makers have recently come to a good working agreement and it is not possible to buy there and pay duty, transportation, etc., and compete with the present domestic prices.

LEXINGTON, MO.—Mrs. J. P. Coen has sold her residence and greenhouse to D. W. Trine, of Dooley, Va., who took possession December 12. The new owner comes highly recommended.

A SUCCESSFUL CAREER.

John Eblen, "Honest John," of New Orleans, has an interesting history, and one that points a moral, though it may not adorn a tale.

He was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1843, and has been engaged in horticulture since leaving school at the age of 18 years. He began with his uncle at Stuttgart, going from there to the royal gardens at Kennstadt. When 23 years old he went to Paris, where he was employed in the government gardens which supply plants and flowers for public places. From that position he went to work for the estate of the late Baron Rothschild, in which position he continued until the war between France and Germany in 1871, when the unpleasant conditions prompted him to come to the United States. He selected New Orleans as his location, and soon began business for himself. In 1876 he established Mount Ararat Nursery, in the vicinity of Audubon park. His knowledge of the business, coupled with his industry and integrity, made him successful from the start. When the New Orleans Horticultural Society was formed in 1884, Mr. Eblen was elected treasurer, which position he has held ever since. This alone is indicative of the high esteem in which he is held by his brethren in the craft.

As a grower Mr. Eblen is successful with all plants, and especially with the delicate ones. He is now making a specialty of adiantum. By careful investments and shrewd business tact he is now in excellent financial circumstances, and can retire from business at any time, with the knowledge that he has been successful in the best sense of the word. His domestic relations have always been congenial, and his large family of children, now grown up, and some of them well established, have reason to be proud of their father's achievements.

NEW SWEET PEAS.

Progeny of Gladys Unwin.

The advent of the Countess Spencer type of sweet pea marked the greatest advance made in many years of fairly rapid progress with this popular flower, but it remained for an English amateur gardener to "fix" these new qualities in the variety which has gone around the world as Gladys Unwin. From Gladys Unwin have come several new colors, the varieties said to have all the characteristics of the parent and as unchangeable as in that variety. Four of these have been grown in sufficient quantity that they soon will be claiming the attention of American sweet pea fanciers. They each produce seventy to seventy-five per cent, four blooms to the stalk.

These new varieties, which are shown in the colored plate sent out as a supplement with this issue of the REVIEW may be described as follows:

Nora Unwin takes its place easily in the front rank of whites, far outdistancing Dorothy Eckford, which was hitherto considered the finest white. This variety has the same bold, wavy standard as Gladys Unwin.

Mrs. Alfred Watkins is a superb pink of Gladys Unwin type, the same pale pink color as the old Princess Beatrice, which was thought so much of when it came out many years ago; but the flowers of Mrs. Alfred Watkins are so much larger and have the beautiful, bold wavy standard of Gladys Unwin. It will be one of the best market varieties for cut bloom.

Frank Dolby is a lovely pale blue, the same shade as Lady Grisel Hamilton but much larger, and, being also bred from Gladys Unwin, it has the same bold, wavy standard. It is the largest and finest pale blue sweet pea.

E. J. Castle is a magnificent addition to the Gladys Unwin class, with the same large flowers and bold, wavy standard of its parent. It is somewhat lighter than John Ingman, but with rather more salmon shading in the standard, and has a lovely effect.

SWEET PEAS.

I grow a great many sweet peas and have had the best of success with them. I have never shipped to the New York market, but mean to try this year. Can you give me a little advice on this subject? Will it be best to bunch them fifty in a bunch, or 100? They are picked here in the morning, placed in water until packed, shipped at 8 in the evening and will reach New York early in the morning, about 8 a. m. Will it be advisable to wrap each bunch in wax paper, or would they be less liable to heat if not wrapped? Would you advise shipping to a wholesaler or a retailer? We expect to pick about 10,000 stems per day. Last year I began picking June 20 and picked continuously until October 7. Would any other fertilizer besides stable manure and wood ashes be advisable for use?

MRS. LOUIS J. BATES.

Watkins, N. Y.

We should recommend by all means shipping to a wholesale commission florist. Pick out one among the advertisers in the REVIEW and write to him about picking, bunching, packing and shipping. He also will tell you what colors or varieties he can use to best advantage.—ED.

night temperature of 55 to 60 degrees. Charles X is purple in color, but forces rapidly. Marie Legraye, pure white, is the most useful to the florist and of double varieties, Madame Lemoine is fine.

I must add a word about this forcing process. We all can realize that the further we are in advance of the natural time of flowering the greater must be the heat and more time must be allowed. The nearer we approach the time of flowering the less forcing it requires. Easter is early this year, and these facts must be considered. We have forced out lilac for New Year's in a high temperature, but two months later much less heat is necessary and the flower is far better. We have heard good gardeners say they could force out astilbe roots to flower in four weeks. That is true in the month of May, but in March it is different. Better allow, this year, ten weeks for your astilbe.

PROPAGATING BEAUTIES.

The methods of propagating American Beauties, particularly in the selection of propagating wood is somewhat different from that employed where teas or their hybrids are concerned and many of the failures attending the propagation of this rose arise from the fact that they are treated much in the same manner as Brides, Richmonds, etc. In nearly all houses devoted to Beauties there will be found a percentage of plants which while being very vigorous in growth, with a wealth of foliage, persistently refuse to make buds during the winter season and seem, in spite of all treatment, to devote their entire vitality to making wood.

As a cutting is by no means a new plant, such as we get from a seed, but simply a perpetuation of part of a branch of the old plant, we ought to be careful in selecting the wood so as not to perpetuate any branch having any disease, weakness or other undesirable characteristics. Those plants which have refused to make buds will of course have a larger supply of wood than those which have done their part in bearing blooms, and consequently present a larger harvest of cutting wood which, producing no revenue, invites the propagator to use it in preference to denuding the plants which show an inclination to produce buds.

Plants which have a good habit and have proved themselves free bloomers should always be selected as these characters will undoubtedly under careful cultivation be maintained and possibly accentuated in the young stock if this system of selection is followed year after year.

Close jointed, well ripened wood from this class of stock will produce stock of a more uniform size and habit and the productiveness will be increased perceptibly if this system is persistently followed. This statement is deduced from actual experiment and supported by records during a long period of successful Beauty growing.

By confining our selection of wood to short-jointed growths we are enabled to get cuttings of a like condition of ripeness which insures a more uniform root formation than if long stems be used for cutting wood as it stands to reason that only a limited number of eyes on such a stem can be in a fit state to make a successful plant and form roots in the same period of time. The consequences will be that the rooting stage will be very uneven.

A cutting with three or four eyes is preferable to a one-eyed cutting as they make a more thrifty plant and do not make such a soft, rank growth, but form a bush quicker when benched.

POOR SOIL.

I am sending a rose plant from a bench that was planted in June, in soil piled up over winter, then mixed with one-fifth its bulk of rotted manure, mostly horse manure. The plants were good plants out of 4-inch pots, and at first seemed to be doing finely, but early in the fall commenced to go back, until now they are mostly in the condition you see. They have had good attention, plenty of ventilation, night temperature of 58 to 60 degrees. In the same house is a bench planted in different soil, soil procured in the spring and manured as the other and used at once, all sod soil from old pasture. It is doing well. The soil I am sending is, as you see, full of small insects like thrips only white. If you can give me any light on this matter I would be glad. We had a little of the same trouble last year; same soil. Before this we have always had fair success with roses.

After a careful examination of these plants and the soil accompanying them

Vacant Chair, by Joseph Haube, Charleroi, Pa.

Establishment of Joseph Haube, Charleroi, Pa.

I am forced to the conclusion that they are simply suffering from want of proper food. The soil is of a poor quality and not at all suited for roses.

The best and surest remedy would be to give frequent and light mulches of decomposed cow manure, and I have found it beneficial under such conditions to give a generous sprinkling of bone meal to the bench before applying the mulch.

Until the plants begin to show some vigor great care must be exercised in watering as evaporation is slow at this season and the plants being weak cannot use much water.

One of the plants is also affected with anthracnose, doubtless brought on and encouraged by their weak condition. This disease is liable to spread and affect the healthy and stronger plants if not checked.

Cut off and burn all decaying shoots a few inches below the point affected. Give plenty of ventilation whenever possible and spray once a week with the copper solution (cupram) using a nozzle that makes a very fine spray.

The insects in the soil are the larvæ of thrips and are a sure indication that the perfect insect is in the house and at work. Light fumigation will hold them in check if practiced persistently twice a week. To make the fumes more effective some growers sprinkle red pepper on the stems with good results. RIBES.

THE TRADE IN MISSISSIPPI.

Among the progressive florists are the Misses Lucy E. and Sue M. Cabaniss, of Jackson, Miss. They started in the flower business absolutely without capital, and now have a nice trade, with a greenhouse in the outskirts of town for growing ferns and other plants, but they still look to Chicago for the cut flowers used at their flourishing stand in the city. The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of their booth at the recent successful Mississippi Industrial Exposition. The young man in the picture is Lindsey P. Cabaniss, who has charge of the cut flower department. The Misses Cabaniss say that, while the florist business in Mississippi has not attained the proportions it has in northern, and particularly eastern, cities, still the people of Jackson are fully alive to the beauty and desirability of both flowers and plants and lend every encouragement possible to those in the trade.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

A grand thing in the way of ferns is being placed on the market this fall by Messrs. T. Rochford & Sons, Ltd., of Broxbourne, Herts, called Nephrolepis Todeaoides. It is said to be one of the most beautiful ferns ever put into commerce, even surpassing that beautiful variety, Todea superba. It has received favorable press notice and has obtained several certificates and awards. The following is the raiser's description: "This is undoubtedly the most beautiful, as well as the most distinct, of all known forms of nephrolepis and seems to mark the limit of the process of evolution in that genus, which has lately given us many handsome forms, all of which fall short in beauty of the present variety. The fronds are three feet long and twelve inches broad in their widest part, and are distinctly tripinnate, with the second leaflets twisting a little from the surface of the frond. The third leaflets are of a distinctly curly nature and give the massive fronds a singularly light and airy appearance, the general aspect being like a well-curled ostrich feather of a pleasing green color."

The variety will doubtless become a general and popular market sort, a great feature being the furnishing of the small plants, which, when only in 2-inch or 3-inch pots, carry several large moss-like fronds.

The same firm is also offering a new begonia called Masterpiece, which is described as a new and improved form of Gloire de Lorraine. The habit of growth and color of bloom, etc., being a glorified type of the latter variety. Some improvement has for some time been needed in the stocks of Gloire de Lorraine. The type in some instance lacking the good qualities to which it owed its fame and value in commerce at the time of its introduction. Any improvement, or even keeping the variety to its true character is much to be desired.

The Winter Flowering Carnation Society held its first show on December 4, which was a great success. With Improved White Lawson A. F. Dutton, Iver, Bucks, secured first prize for the best white. The same grower had the best pink in Mrs. T. W. Lawson. Enchantress took the premium for blush pink. Robert Craig was undoubtedly a fine scarlet, but not equal to the new Brittania, which was the best of that color in the show. In trade exhibits the following received gold medals: H. Burnett, Guernsey, and A. Smith, Enfield. The following firms silver gilt medals: Cutbush & Sons, Highgate; Hugh Lowe & Co., Bush Hill Park; A. F. Dutton, Iver, Bucks, and Bell & Sheldon, Guernsey. ASTERS.

I wish to raise asters for market next summer and would like to know the three best classes to grow, also what fertilizers other than stable manure and wood ashes it would be advisable to use, my soil being clay loam.

Where can I get a good work or treatise on raising asters for market? Also what size box would it be advisable to use for shipping? Would 12x16 and three feet long be large enough to heat.

difficult to recommend any, every seedsman having a favorite strain. Broadly then, I would say grow a small proportion of the early market varieties. The Boston Market is a good one. For a succeeding variety grow the Peony Perfection and for a late crop be sure to grow Semple's Branching, or Vick's, which is similar. I must also advise you to try some of the Comet variety, which is distinct and by specialists has been brought to great perfection.

The writer remembers when in this country we thought we could not get aster seed unless it was imported in packets from Germany or the south of France. That was a fallacy, for our summer climate is as good as theirs for saving seed and all you have to do is to select the finest flowers from plants of the best habit and let them go to seed. Select your fine flowers and tie a United States flag on them and you will soon have aster seed of your own saving.

You will not need any other fertilizer besides stable manure for several years and lucky you are if you can get plenty of that. I would advise you to plow your ground in the fall and when it is in a condition to be friable in the spring, harrow or cultivate it. As it is too late for that now, be content with plowing some fine day next April. Do not make your aster fields beyond reach of the hose, for asters suffer terribly in a dry time, which often occurs in August.

By no means put more than twenty-five in a bunch, each bunch wrapped in tissue paper, and there will be no danger of their heating. W. S.

FLORISTS AND EXPRESS RATES.....

Complaint is Frequent.

There is much complaint against transportation companies just now and we often hear it asserted that express rates are constantly being raised. They may have been raised on cut flowers, in certain cases, but on plants they have actually been decreasing. The express rates on plants, bulbs and seeds are of two classes. One is known as section D, the other as "general special." We should make money for ourselves by studying them.

To Compete With Mail.

Section D matter must be sent prepaid, the rate being the same as third-class mail matter, except that the minimum charge is 10 cents for each company carrying. These rates also apply to Canada, whereas the mail rate is double, viz., 1 cent an ounce. These rates can be applied to all shipments, no matter what the weight, but 2 cents is deducted from each package when the weight is fifty ounces or more, and no charge for a package weighing less than fifty ounces to be more than the charge for fifty ounces. For example, on three pounds two ounces, or fifty ounces, the charge is 23 cents. Four pounds ten ounces can be sent to any place in either the United States or Canada where any of the express companies belonging to the traffic committee are represented for 35 cents, and 35 cents is the minimum charge on general specials. Shipments above four pounds ten ounces will be sent under the general special class unless the special rate is more than $8 per hundred, when section D rate will again be used.

The express company will always give you the benefit of the lowest rate. But I will state here that it is well to check up the receipted bill, which should show the weight of the shipments, and if lowest rate has not been applied it may easily be detected. These overcharges are not done intentionally, but are due to a lack of knowledge of the rate on the part of the bill clerk. I have found by experience that this was one of the hardest problems to get into a new bill clerk's head.

General Special.

The general special rate is defined in the express tariffs as a certain per cent or rate less than the regular merchandise rate, at pound rates, no charge less than 35 cents for each company carrying. For a number of years twenty per cent off has been this rate, but within the last year a better rate has been given to the following states: Connecticut, Delaware, District of Columbia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and South Dakota points east of the Missouri river. This scale begins at the 90-cent merchandise rate, going to the $8 merchandise rate, which will cover the rate from Springfield to any point in the states named.

If the merchandise rate is $1 per hundred pounds the general special rate is 80 cents, or just twenty per cent discount. When merchandise rates are higher the general special plant rate is as follows:

Mdse. rate.	Gen. Special.	Discount.
$2.00	$1.50	25%
4.00	2.90	27½%
5.00	3.40	32%
6.00	4.00	33 1/3%
7.00	4.75	32⅛%
8.00	5.50	31¼%

Pound Rates.

The special rate to all other states is twenty per cent less than the merchandise rates except when goods are shipped in baskets, when regular merchandise rates apply, but they are taken at pound rates. Pound rates means, the charge per pound is in cents what the charge per one hundred is in dollars. For example: If the merchandise rate to a point in Texas is $6 the special is $4, or 4 cents a pound. Then the charge on a twenty-pound package would be 80 cents, but if shipped in baskets it would be 6 cents a pound, making a charge of $1.20, yet the charges on a package of merchandise not eligible to the general special would be $1.65. So it will be seen that the florists are treated much better than the other shippers, except publishers, fruit and produce dealers, and shippers of beer and whisky. I could never understand why the express companies lowered the florists to a level with these four shippers, or put them on a par with the florists.

Rates to California.

Another thing that is not generally known is that California has 350 points with a special rate of $7 and $7.50, a large majority being $7. This is a better rate than is given by Uncle Sam. The balance of the points in the state cannot be more than $8, which is the same rate offered by mail, with enough left on each package of fifty ounces or more to pay the expense of sending a postal notice of shipment.

Overcharges.

As I stated before, section D must be prepaid, but general specials may be sent collect, so that the customer gets the advantage of this rate also; but the trouble is that in many cases the agent at destination, through ignorance, overcharges the consignee. If a bill is made with either less or more charges than should be, it is the duty of the agent at destination to make correction on the bill, collecting the correct amount.

Very few overcharges are made at the larger points, but at the small towns the railroad agent acts for the express company, and in most cases on a commission. These are the ones who do not keep posted on the rates. True, they have the tariffs, but as a rule they do not study them as they should, and, unless a great deal of matter under general specials is shipped from their office, they know very little of the special rates. We will take for example a case using the same rate as I have shown: One of these agents receives a package weighing twenty pounds, billed at 80 cents. This appears to him to be a small charge, especially if he is a commission agent. He refers to his tariff, finds the merchandise rates per one hundred pounds to be $6 and his graduated card tells him the charges on twenty pounds at this rate is $1.65. He doesn't look to see that the special rate is $4 and that the charge of 80 cents is correct, but adds 85 cents to the bill, collecting $1.65 from consignee. Is it any wonder that people become discouraged and do not care to repeat the operation? How many people do you imagine have quit sending away for their plants just for this reason. You hear of a few, but the majority simply drop out. It is not the fault of the express company, but the ignorance of some employee, and prepaying the shipments will be a protection against this, to both yourself and customer.

Small Packages.

I have found that to send small packages by express is satisfactory in many ways. You have the means of tracing your shipments and knowing the condition in which they were received. Few complaints are received as to boxes being broken or plants crushed, but in cases where this occurs, claims can be made for them, and replaces sent free where goods have been damaged in transit.

The express companies have met the postal rates on plants, and have gone them one better. If a parcels post is adopted giving us a lower rate than the third-class rate, no doubt the express companies will meet that rate, but, if the parcels post raises the rate on plants, the express companies will without a doubt raise their rates to the one adopted by Uncle Sam. With companies giving us as good rates as are in existence, we should encourage them by giving them more of our business—business we are now sending by mail, and for which we are paying more than if sent by express.

Use of Baskets.

I am not in the employ of any express company, nor am I fortunate enough to own a block of stock in any of them, but if you will take the pains to familiarize yourselves with their rates, only to those applying to your business, I am certain you will not think them the demons they are pictured. Either ignorance of the rates or negligence on the part of the shippers in packing is often the cause for excessive charges collected on plant shipments. My attention was lately called to a case of a shipment, that, had the packer been familiar with the rates, would have saved the customer $1.05. The shipment consisted of two packages weighing twenty pounds each. One was a box, the other a basket. These two packages could not be sent under the same rate, yet they were consigned to the same person. The charge on the basket was $2.45, on the box $1.40. Had it been packed in one box weighing forty pounds, or in two boxes weighing twenty pounds each, the charges would have been $2.80 instead of $3.85. Will the customer understand why the express company charges $1.05 more for one package weighing twenty pounds than it did for the other? And, if the express agent explains to him why this difference was made, will he not think the shipper should know of these things, thus saving his customer these excessive charges?

The higher charge on a basket is not its only drawback as a packing case. I have watched wagonmen load their wagons and messengers placing their freight in cars. If they have a small hole to fill up, just too small for any package or box available, they find a basket of plants the best thing to squeeze together and force into that hole. It fits perfectly and when it is taken out and pressed back into shape it is impossible to tell where the damage occurred, as the records show it to have been delivered in apparently good condition.

If you are going to prepay a shipment, or are going to send it collect, and don't want your customer to go into the air, do not pack in baskets. Of course, you can send to many points in baskets as cheaply as in boxes, but only in cases where the maximum charge on the regular merchandise rate would be 35 cents.

If you have more than one box for the same consignee, pack so that each shipment will weigh twenty pounds or more, as the weight is aggregated, but if one box weighs less than twenty pounds to be aggregated with other packages, it is billed at twenty pounds. If you must pack in two boxes and each weighs less than twenty pounds, fasten the two boxes together after they are packed instead of sending as two packages.

Playing Favorites.

Do not play favorites in shipping. Divide your common point and foreign company business among all of the companies and you will find that you receive better service, and any grievance you may have with any company will receive better attention. If nothing is done to correct some error, or if the company is dilatory in settling claims, or tracing shipments, then take this business from it for a few days and see how quickly they will try to adjust matters. If each agent sees he is getting some business each day that the other fellow could take, he feels that you are favoring him; consequently he feels he should favor you whenever he has the opportunity to do so.

Knowledge of Rates Necessary.

Become better acquainted with the express plant rates; study them until you understand all the points. Any of the express agents will be glad to come to your office and spend as much time as you desire explaining them to you. If you will do this I am positive you will have more satisfactory relations with the express companies than heretofore.

IXIAS.

The cultivation of the ixias is of the simplest, and in growing them for decorations, or supplying cut flowers, it is an excellent practice to use 5-inch or 6-inch pots, and to put six or seven bulbs in each. The pots should be provided with efficient drainage, and filled with a compost consisting of fibrous loam four parts and leaf-mold and sand one part. Press the compost firmly about the bulbs, and when the potting is completed, plunge the pots to their rim in a bed of ashes or cocoanut fiber refuse made up in an unheated pit. With the compost in a moderately moist state when the bulbs are potted, no water will be required unless they have commenced to make new growth, and then in very moderate quantities. Ventilate freely after the growth has commenced, and remove the lights except in wet weather or during frosts. In the ordinary course the bulbs will have made several inches of growth by February, when they should be removed to the greenhouse or other cool, airy structure, and be placed near the glass to ensure their having the advantage of uninterrupted light. Care in watering is necessary at all stages, for ixias suffer materially when the supply of water is in excess of their requirements.

In outdoor culture select a sunny border where the growth will in spring be sheltered from north and east winds. Make up a bed four or five inches or so above the general level with sandy loam, and place the bulbs three inches apart. Then cover them with a layer of coarse sand, and upon this put a 3-inch layer of soil. The bed should then be covered with straw, bracken, or loose material, to protect from frost, but the covering must be removed in early spring or the growth will become drawn.—Gardeners' Magazine.

ZANESVILLE, O.—A. R. Edwards held a reception at his store one afternoon and evening last week. He had on exhibition cut flowers, plants, moss wreaths, goldfish, holly and an abundance of Norway pine and Christmas trees. A handsome souvenir was given each guest.

THE araucaria has come into its own as a Christmas plant.

EASTER, 1907, falls on March 31, two weeks earlier than in 1906.

AS to Christmas prices, it is worth while remembering that it is supply and demand, nothing else, which regulates values.

THE interstate commerce commission announces that in consequence of a large number of complaints from all sections of the country it is about to undertake a general inquiry into the reasonableness of express rates.

NOTICE.

To Advertisers and Correspondents.

Advertisers and correspondents are asked to note that New Year's falls on Tuesday, the busiest day in the office of the REVIEW. It is desirable that copy for the issue of January 3 be placed in our hands one day earlier than usual.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Valley on Heating Pipes.

Seeing an article in the Review of December 13 on "Valley Under Benches," written by Mr. Scott, I wish to state that I have grown them for a number of years, both in pots and flats, and have grown them no other way. I have used moss, as he states, but I find by laying pots or flats the same size, over the pipes and stopping the holes with moss, they act much better, as they are not so apt to rot as with the damp moss, and I find they grow more evenly. I disagree with him in the cutting of the roots, as I never leave them much over three inches, if any, and I doubt if Mr. Scott has had better success than I have had.

F. JENKINS.

Transportation Problems.

The trouble why so many shipments are wrongly classified is not the desire of the transportation company to skin us, any more than it is our desire to skin others. The average shipper does not take the time to study the various classifications, noting changes, etc.

Every shipper should state the address, town, county, street, state, then what the shipment consists of, boxes, bales, etc., what items they contain, the freight rate, the delivering line, etc., not hurriedly but methodically.

Every railroad or express employee is just as anxious to do his duty as is the florist; he is just as anxious to correct errors that are not his fault as is the average florist. The average transportation employee works hard for the little that is doled out for his hard work; work that is very trying, very exacting. Railroads are in it for every limit the traffic will stand, and they get it. If the average florist would follow their lead there would be more enjoyment in the business, for considering the ability, perplexities, care and responsibility required of the average florist, the amount received as compensation is relatively meager. The student of scientific economics sees the need of better help, better surroundings, better pay, better hours, better prices, more business-like methods or the whole trade will suffer by our fogginess.

C. BETSCHER.

A Bad Habit.

I would like to call the attention of the readers of the REVIEW to a habit among our wholesale men, which, although it may seem trifling, does harm.

Some days ago I received a box, containing wire frames, marked, "Rush, Perishable Flowers! No delay!" The train was late and the expressman rushed over to the greenhouse, it being nearly midnight. The next day I received a box of violets. It was not marked "Rush" and the box remained in the express office over night. Would it not be better to use "Rush," etc., only on boxes containing perishable flowers and not on florists' supplies? The express companies are, during the holiday time, rushed to the limit and it does not seem right to rush the employees when there is no occasion for it.

W. BAY.

CINERARIAS.

My cinerarias are budding and look fine and healthy. The seed was sown in August and the plants are now in 4-inch and 5-inch pots. The soil is composed of three-fourths rotted sod, one-fourth leaf-mold, with a little well rotted manure added. I keep them in a temperature of about 50 degrees night and day. The lower leaves wilt and gradually die. As the plants are free from insects I am at a loss to know the trouble.

F. B. F.

The cineraria is considered a cheap and unprofitable plant, but with all that it wants careful watching, as much as many other more expensive plants. You appear to have sown them at the proper time and have used an excellent compost for growing them, and the temperature is not wrong, although 40 degrees at night and 50 degrees in the daytime would be nearer the ideal. This is one of those cold-blooded plants that are hurt with the slightest frost and yet will grow and thrive a few degrees above it.

The fact that they are showing flower so early is because the roots are confined in too small pots. The wilting of the lower leaves we have often seen occur and may be caused by the soil in the pots being too dry, and it also may be caused by too much watering. The writer knows no plant that needs more care in watering than the cineraria and it is the watchful care that is needed in this respect that makes them unprofitable. They want water just when they need it. If you used sifted soil and it is fine in texture and does not let water pass freely through it is almost impossible to grow cinerarias. The potting soil, especially in their last shift, should be coarse and porous and then overwatering is not liable to do so much harm.

Unless wanted to flower in January I would advise you to pinch out the flower stem. Shift the 4-inch into 6-inch pots and you will have fine plants later in spring. Keep them on a light, airy bench and keep them at 40 degrees night and 50 degrees in the daytime, and you must give plenty of room between the plants.

FOND DU LAC, WIS.—E. Haentze has turned the active management of his business over to his sons, and in the spring intends to pay a visit to his old home and relatives in Germany.

SPARTA, ILL.—H. O. Clendenin says Christmas trade was about as usual. Cut flowers had the call, with carnations the leading favorites. The non-arrival of Christmas trees and later shipments of holly was a sore disappointment and placed them in a trying situation, as all the trees were sold in advance.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The stranger visiting the acres upon acres of glass in this vicinity, devoted to cut flowers, might suppose the resources of the Chicago market to be practically without limit, but it is when Chicago is called upon to meet the feverish demand produced by a Christmas shortage in practically all that great stretch of country between the Alleghenies and the Rockies, from Canada to the gulf, that one gains a fair realization of our great resources.

The Christmas demand was something wholly without precedent. Orders in number and in size eclipsed all previous records. The only saving clause was that the demand was spread over several days, Sunday intervening, to the great advantage of both retailers and wholesalers, although just the opposite effect had been expected. Early in the week the orders from out of town began to pour upon the wholesalers in such volume that most of the houses were early booked up on most lines. Saturday's shipping business far exceeded expectations. The supplies of stock were less than had been anticipated, as a result of weeks of almost unbroken dark weather and because growers had been told to make their heaviest shipments Sunday. But, nevertheless, great quantities of material were available, although much more would have been consumed had it been possible to fill all orders complete. As early as Saturday wholesalers were face to face with the necessity of cutting orders booked long in advance. This was particularly true of roses, aside from red, good Bridesmaids being the scarcest item. It is safe to say that seldom have good roses been so much short of the demand. There were nowhere near enough carnations to fill Saturday's orders, although several houses had quantities of white which they were compelled to carry over Saturday night, and, indeed, there were considerable quantities of white carnations left when the Christmas business was ended, and it will serve to pull down average prices.

Sunday's shipping was heavy, but not so great as Saturday's, and there was more stock to do with, so orders were sent out more nearly complete than on Saturday. As a summing up it may be said that all roses were far below requirements and prices were paid by local retailers such as would have been a shock to out-of-town buyers had stock been sent them at those rates. Red was scarcest, of course, but first-class Maids were scarcely less so. Uncle John, which is grown instead of Gate, was in fair supply because not in great request. Every colored carnation sold, except some sleepy stock, but there were whites to spare; indeed some were still on hand Wednesday.

The city trade began with a rush Monday morning, but was soon satisfied. The afternoon found little doing except getting out belated shipping orders. In the evening there was a rally which cleaned up considerable stock, but when it was all over there were, besides the white carnations, large lots of poinsettias, thousands of Paper Whites and Romans, considerable valley, lilies, much mignonette, stevia and other odds and ends for which there had been no call. The receipts of chrysanthemums were light but much of the stock was poor, and even the best was in light demand. Violets were in big supply and sold well, heavy advance orders having been booked, but at the close there was a tendency to shade prices.

The retailers all did a big business in one way or another, and, on the whole, everyone was satisfied, although a better supply of roses would have been a great relief; as it was the few growers who had good cuts found Christmas a gold mine.

Wednesday, of course, saw light receipts, but neither was there much demand, although a stiff market is looked for for the next ten days at least.

Christmas Plants.

The plants sold this Christmas were in both quantity and quality ahead of last year. The ardisia was everywhere, and heavily berried, shapely stock. Poinsettias were more abundant than usual, most of them well grown, low, wide-headed plants in pans. Azaleas were plentiful and nicely flowered. Verveneana made up the bulk of the stock, but a good proportion were Simon Mardner. Lorraine begonias were in splendid shape. More growers are learning to do this plant well, but many of the best still come from Peterson, at Cincinnati. These were the principal items, although oranges, cyclamens, primulas, ericas, etc., played their parts. Araucarias led all decorative plants, although many Elegantissima and Whitmani ferns were sold. Boxwood was everywhere, both plants in pots and cut, made up into

Order Picker: "Say, Boss! Metropolis wants 200 Brides."

The boss: "Can't you get 'em?"

Order Picker: "Nary one."

The Boss: "Oh, well! Give 'em a hundred Uncle Jchn."

Various Notes.

Fred Weber has made arrangements to double his glass as soon as building can be begun in the spring. He bought the glass more than a month ago, when the market was at the bottom. The addition will be two high houses 27½x300. Mr. Weber's crop is Beauties he has done so well that he thinks nothing could equal them. He now has grown his plants eighteen months without rest. He had a splendid crop in the summer, when good Beauties are scarce, and has another fine cut just coming on. He missed Christmas by about a week, but there always is a good market in January. E. C. Amling is Mr. Weber's selling agent.

W. J. Smyth took full advantage of his new show windows to make the finest Christmas display he has ever shown, especially effective at night, illuminated by seventy-five red incandescents. The windows were filled with ardisias and poinsettias, in red pot covers, baskets and hampers. The back of the window was formed by long loops of lycopodium wreathing, at the end of each loop an Alpha bell. Mr. Smyth said it was much his biggest Christmas, but practically all plants. "People who asked for cut flowers simply walked out when told the price."

Arnold Ringier, secretary of the W. W. Barnard Co., states that the business in holiday greens was "the best ever." High prices generally were accepted as a matter of course and the inability to fill all orders was the only feature which caused concern.

Jchn Poehlmann says he found time in Monday's rush to accept a proposition from the agent of the McCormick estate, which will, after May 1, give the Poehlmann Bros. Co. twice as much room as it now occupies in the basement of the Atlas block. The increase in the firm's glass and production make more commodious selling quarters very necessary.

A. Lange has renamed the Rosalind Orr English rose as Lady English in his advertisements in the daily papers, and it really has a better sound, but when he says "It has recently supplanted American Beauty as the favorite rose," it is possible he is drawing the long bow.

Leonard Kill says that Peter Reinberg's Christmas sales were so much greater than last year—consequent upon more glass, better crops and better prices—that he hesitates to say just what the increase was for fear that it will add nothing to his reputation for veracity.

Fleischman, in the Railway Exchange building, is said to have been the largest local buyer of cut flowers for Christmas. The store is not large enough for the plant trade done by the stores with conservatories. Nothing but the best cut stock is handled, largely Beauties, violets and quantities of orchids.

Frank Garland, at Des Plaines, says he has a few dozen plants of a sport of Enchantress that is the best yet. It is about as dark as Lawson.

W. E. Wadsworth, who has charge of Muir's Forty-seventh street store, says the Christmas call was largely for baskets of plants, poinsettias being the leader, with Lorraine begonia second.

The park gardeners are asking an increase in wages to give them all $75 a month. They now get from $60 to $70.

Uncle John Thorpe had a two-column article on "The Flower Shop" in the Daily News a few days before Christmas which must have been worth a great deal to the trade.

Kennicott Bros. Co. handled quite a quantity of good mums for Christmas.

The supply people report being pretty well sold out of Christmas specialties.

The big charity ball New Year's Eve is looked to as sure to call for many flowers, especially violets.

J. J. Soper, of Rockford, was a visitor Saturday, looking up Christmas stock. He says business is flourishing in Rockford, and it is no longer a question of price if the stock pleases the buyers.

BOSTON

The Christmas Market.

Growers, wholesalers and retailers once more report the best Christmas trade on record. The weather, which had been clear and pleasant, changed to fog and rain December 20 and one or two days following were about as dark and dismal as could be imagined. The mild weather, however, made it possible to move plants with little covering. Predictions for a green Christmas were shattered by a heavy snowfall, which came unheralded and unexpectedly on Saturday evening. Sunday proved dull and moderately cold, while Christmas eve proved still colder, and plants and flowers had to be securely wrapped. The dark weather to some extent upset calculations as to the flower crop, roses and carnations proving less abundant than had been hoped for.

There was, as usual, a good call for pot plants and while nothing really new or unique was forthcoming, the old favorites were in good supply and demand. In azaleas, Apollo and Firefly were the leaders, although white and pink shades were also in some request. In berried plants some fine hollies were seen and skimmias, aucubas, ardisias and solanums were all in more or less call. Cyclamens, colored Primula Sinensis, Erica melanthera, poinsettias, white and pink Lorraine begonias and Cypripedium insigne were the leaders. Tulips were seen at some stores, but were short-stemmed and small. Made up pans with mixtures of foliage and flowering plants sold well at some stores and there was a good call for fern pans and medium-sized palms. Boston florists do not use the amount of ribbon in "decorating" their plants as in some cities and we earnestly hope they never will. Well grown plants are not improved by it but too often made hideous.

In cut flowers roses, as was expected, proved none too plentiful and realized good prices. Top figures on Beauties were $15 to $18 per dozen. First quality Richmond made half these prices. This was easily the most popular rose on the market. Some good Liberty was seen and sold well. Wellesley, Killarney, Chatenay, Bride and Bridesmaid made up to $4 per dozen. Some fine Morgan, Mrs. Oliver Ames, Safrano and Bon Silene were noted and all sold well. In carnations, scarlets, such as Cardinal, Victory and Robert Craig, and crimsons, made $10 to $12.50 per hundred. Enchantress, Fair Maid, Lawson, Helen Goddard, Mrs. Patten, Variegated Lawson and ordinary scarlets and crimsons brought $8 to $10. Whites made $6. Some were sold at lower prices than the foregoing, but were inferior goods. Even whites were less druggy than sometimes occurs.

Violets sold mostly at $1.50 and $2 per hundred. These were of very fine quality, singles, as usual, selling the highest. Callas and Lilium Harrisii did not advance much. Poinsettias made all the way from $2 to $8 per dozen. Not many made the highest figure, but quite a few reached $6. Euphorbia Jacquiniæflora and scarlet bouvardia sold well. Sweet peas at $2 per hundred, antirrhinum at $4 to $8, mignonette from $4 to $10, valley from $4 to $5, Cypripedium insigne $12, marguerites, yellow and white, $2 to $3; Paper Whites and Roman hyacinths, $2 to $3, and chrysanthemums, were the bulk of the other flowers in evidence. The last named flowers were on the wane. A few made up to $6 per dozen. Others had trouble in making that price per hundred. Bulbous stock and stevia were in abundant supply. Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri sold well and adiantum stiffened to $1 and $1.25 per hundred.

As usual, the wholesalers and retailers did a heavy business in mistletoe and holly. The first named was splendidly berried. English holly, where imported, was well berried, but a good deal of southern stock was poor. Laurel and box were in heavy demand for wreathing and a lot of ground pine also was used.

Various Notes.

Peirce Bros. sold a large quantity of azaleas, Firefly being the leader. They also had good cyclamens. They about cleaned out their late mums and had a large crop of carnations, including a fine lot of their new scarlet, Governor Guild.

W. W. Edgar & Co., as usual, had an excellent lot of poinsettias, azaleas, Lorraine begonias and other seasonable flowering plants. They also sold many ferns in pans and other foliage plants.

Houghton & Clark made a specialty of orchids in their window, including well bloomed Cypripedium insigne and cattleyas.

McMulkin had a most effective scarlet window. Among other flowers used were Euphorbia Jacquiniæflora, Salvia splendens, ardisias, poinsettias, scarlet carnations and roses and holly. Some excellent Gros Colman grapes were used and showed up well in the scarlet setting.

S. J. Goddard had extra good Cardinal, Victory, Harry Fenn and Helen Goddard carnations.

William Sim had an immense quantity of single violets of first quality and could have sold many more.

Galvin had numerous finely berried hollies in tubs. His White Perfection, Beacon and Evangeline carnations from Peter Fisher were excellent. Beacon promises to be a wonderful scarlet and will be extensively grown another season.

William H. Elliott had a magnificent lot of Richmond, among other roses. Some Safrano and Bon Silene from his Madbury, N. H., establishment took well. Quite a few critical buyers preferred Richmond to Beauty.

Welch Bros. report that the volume of business they transacted broke all previous records. Their extensive new quarters were none too large. Their Beauties were especially fine, as also was Richmond. They handled many thousands of lily of the valley from Carl Jurgens. Their poinsettias were extra fine and in green stock, wreathing, etc., they did an immense trade, also in pot plants.

Some of the best poinsettias seen came from Dolansky, William Walke, John McFarland and W. W. Edgar Co.

Thomas Roland, of Nahant, had, as usual, a grand lot of Lorraine begonias, including the white Turnford Hall variety, Erica melanthera, azaleas, poinsettias, Euphorbia Jacquiniæflora, cyclamens, Cypripedium insigne and other plants.

H. M. Robinson & Co. were more than satisfied with their first Christmas trade in cut flowers. Their Beauty and Richmond roses, valley, chrysanthemums and carnations were of fine quality. In holly and other greenery, in which they are specialists, they were almost swamped with orders, but managed to fill practically all but very late ones.

Scarlet, yellow and white tulips and Trumpet Major narcissi came from several growers, including H. W. Vose, Hyde Park; Tailby & Son and Mann Bros.

Especially fine violets, among many others, came from A. W. Kidder, Wm. Spillsbury, H. F. Woods, Malcolm Orr and Thomas Pegler.

William Nicholson had some splendid Harry Fenn, Victory, Robert Craig, Aristocrat, After Glow and other novelties in carnations which brought fancy prices.

Farquhar & Co. had a big lot of Lorraine begonias and cyclamen from their Roslindale greenhouses.

Daniel Iliffe has recently finished piping a house for William Capstick, Auburndale, and a dwelling for Thomas Capers, Wellesley Hills. He also has supplied piping and ventilating apparatus for a grapery for James Dowe, Beverly Farms.

E. L. Beard, for many years with the Shady Hills Nursery Co. and formerly of the firm of Temple & Beard, is now in business on his own account as landscape architect, etc., with offices at 155 Milk street.

One of the finest ranges of glass on a private estate in New England will be erected next season for H. C. Frick, the Pittsburg steel magnate, at Prides, Mass., by T. W. Weathered & Co.

The Gardeners and Florists' Club meeting on January 15 will prove especially interesting. It will be ladies' night, the newly elected officers are to be installed and J. K. M. L. Farquhar's stereopticon lecture on Italian gardens will be worth a long journey to see and hear.

In the seed trade bowling league contest on December 19 R. & J. Farquhar & Co. team beat H. E. Fiske Co. by 1,254 to 1,150 and Park Street Flower Market managed to defeat T. W. Emerson & Co. by 1,276 to 1,247.

The Toronto Convention.

On account of the meeting of the American Carnation Society in Toronto, January 22 to 25, New England lines have made a rate of one fare and one-third for the round trip on the certificate plan. This will make the round-trip rate from Boston via West Shore route $16.50, and a corresponding reduction from other points. Tickets will be good leaving January 18 to 24 and are good returning to leave at any time within three days after the close of the meeting. Trains leave Boston at 4:30 and 6:19 p. m., arriving in Toronto the next morning.

If all intending to go to Toronto will notify William Nicholson, Framingham, of their intention as soon as possible he will be pleased to make all necessary arrangements. Prospects are good for a large New England delegation.

The Rising Eastern Market.

Christmas proved the truth of the heading to this paragraph. The largest stock of cut flowers and plants ever marketed in this city has been distributed.

The features of the cut flower business were the immense quantities of choice American Beauty roses received and sold at prices as high as in any previous season, while the aggregate is far in advance of anything ever dreamed of in the past. Fancy stock was sold in hundred lots and one order was noted for 1,000 fancy at $1.25 each. The quality was all that could be desired. Good Maids were scarce. Brides required pushing at times. Killarney sold well, but poorly colored blooms went begging. The demand for lily of the valley was something extraordinary, it being impossible to get enough of the fancy stock to fill orders.

Another striking feature of the market was the abundant supply of red roses, both Liberty and Richmond, of superb quality, being at their best. It is probable that growers of this color will not average more for their roses than those producing pink and white, although some of the fancies sold for higher prices. Cattleyas were in splendid demand, the supply being excellent in some quarters and disappointing in others. The violet market was strong, especially toward the close, when the extremely cold weather threw into the retail stores business ordinarily transacted by the fakers. Singles locally grown were particularly fine and popular with the average buyer, while choice doubles both from Hightstown and the Hudson river district, found ready sale at fair prices. Poinsettias were abundant enough for every demand, the prices on fancies being high.

Carnations were more plentiful than had been anticipated, choice scarlet commanding the highest price. Craig and Flamingo were the most popular varieties. Enchantress led the second division. In a general way it may be said that carnations were sold for $2 per hundred more than at last Christmas, although they will not average the growers quite that much, as some stock will undoubtedly have to be sold in cheap lots to dispose of it at all.

While greens sold well, there was no especial demand for those grown under glass, except in isolated instances. Of the other flowers on the list, it may be said in a general way that they were in good supply and fair demand, considering the high prices. An exception to this is the bulbous stock, Romans and Paper Whites selling rather slowly. Some sweet peas were also poor stock, owing mainly to their condition.

The price list which accompanies this report can only be intelligently read by bearing in mind that the high prices are obtained for the finest stock only, that in a shipment of 500 roses there are frequently not over twenty-five that can be classed as fancies, while 100 or 200, according to the skill of the grower and the condition of his plants, will be classed as shorts, and sold at corresponding figures. Then, too, many growers naturally feel that their stock is as fine as anything that can be produced. In fact, I would have no respect for a grower who did not feel that way, but when this stock comes up against many others in the open market, it is quite another matter.

The quantity of flowering plants sold was something enormous, and to these must be added a moderate number of foliage plants. We are also largely indebted to the enterprise of the supply men, who have given us combination baskets of most artistic pattern, responsible for the disposal of far more material of this kind than would ordinarily be required. The demand for greens was unprecedented. Of course there were quantities left,

The Ball Season.

The season of fashionable midwinter balls, usually commencing about the middle of January, and ending with Lent, a movable date, is this year earlier than ever before. The first large affair in ultra-fashionable circles was a private ball, Mrs. Gowan's, at the Bellevue-Stratford, December 21. The Benedicts followed at Horticultural hall, December 26. Mrs. Van Renssalaer's will be held at the Bellevue-Stratford on Friday; Mrs. Cuyler's, in the same hostelry, January 2; and the First Assembly follows, also in the Bellevue-Stratford, January 4. While these balls do not always affect the market materially, they are apt to do so to some extent, cut flowers being largely used when dinners precede the dance, while the demand for both foliage and blooming plants is quickened. Whether the gaiety of the social season will last until Lent is problematic.

Various Notes.

S. S. Skidelsky will read an essay on "Our Credit System, Its Uses and Abuses," before the Florists' Club at the January meeting.

John Thatcher, for many years gardener to Edward Le Boutillier, Wynnewood, Pa., will, on Tuesday next, take charge of a new place at Chester, W.Va., the property of C. A. Smith. Mr. Thatcher is a member of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society and the Florists' Club, and a grower whose foliage plants have won many prizes.

Marshall Rogers, formerly with Joseph Heacock, will, on Tuesday next, begin work with W. E. McKissick.

M. Rice & Co. report that their lines of Christmas novelties were a big success, and that they received many duplicate orders by telegraph.

Gilbert Woltemate is in charge of his uncle's place at Main and Queen streets, Germantown. Mr. Woltemate has had two years' experience on this place, following several years on his father's place at Mt. Airy avenue.

Theodore Edwards, of Bridgetown, N. J., sent the first Trumpet Major narcissi to W. J. Baker.

D. T. Connor's new greenhouse office is a good card for Lord & Burnham Co.

The Flower Market has paid off its second fifty per cent of the capital stock.

The Leo Niessen Co. had the largest stock of Beauties ever offered in this city at Christmas.

Berger Bros. and W. J. Moore made their market headquarters look like old times.

The S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co. had its big force on the jump. The quantity of stock handled was enormous.

Myers & Samtman cut 13,000 American Beauties for Christmas, 8,200 of which went to the Leo Niessen Co. and the balance to A. M. Murdoch, of Pittsburg. The firm have assured Mr. Niessen that their Beauties will be in crop for six weeks.

Some frozen shipments from the growers were received and express companies got entangled with shipments for the south and west.

Mrs. George Burton, wife of the well-known rose grower, died on Christmas day. The funeral services will be held at her husband's residence on Saturday, at 2 p. m. Mr. Burton has the heartfelt sympathy of his many friends.

Hope you had a busy Christmas, and will have a Happy and a Prosperous New Year. PHIL.

DALLAS, TEX.—Col. E. H. R. Green, who has returned from a business trip to Chicago, has made all arrangements for doubling the capacity of his greenhouses. When completed the equipment will rank among the most complete in the country.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

Current Comment.

The mail order florists are busy with preparations for the issue of their spring catalogues, which have just begun to come from the printers. The work of compiling, setting up and electrotyping the pages, printing, binding and mailing provides employment for a goodly number of persons. This will readily be understood upon glancing at the following figures, representing the actual output of the various concerns in catalogues of from thirty-two to 112 pages: Good & Reese Co., 575,000; Geo. H. Mellen Co., 140,000; Schmidt & Botley, 105,000; McGregor Bros. Co., 100,000; Springfield Floral Co., 65,000; Reeser Floral Co., 65,000, and Fairview Floral Co., 50,000, making a total of 1,100,000.

The sales of plants, seeds and bulbs which result from the scattering of this floral literature throughout the land, and, in fact, over the whole civilized portion of the earth, is something enormous and makes the local floral industry foremost in importance to the post-office and express companies.

John M. and Frank E. Good recently returned from a southern trip, during which they attended the annual meeting of stockholders of the United States Nursery Co., at Rich, Miss., in which a number of other Springfield men are interested. They report having had 125 acres in roses during the last season and the demand for stock such that they were able to fill only forty per cent of their orders. The soil had been somewhat exhausted from continuous planting of cotton, but has been gradually brought into much better condition for the desired purpose.

At the December meeting of the Florists' Club, the subject previously announced was, "Department Stores and How They Affect Our Business." Charles Unglaub opened the discussion from the standpoint of the local retailers and Leman Bradford, John Good, Charles Schmidt, Opha Jackson and others spoke in behalf of the wholesalers, after which the discussion became quite general and naturally somewhat spirited. The local conditions are held to be exceptional, in that we have two large, progressive and prosperous department stores, the Irish owners of which are related by marriage and yet at swords' points. When one introduces a sale on any particular line, the never-be-downed spirit of the other store is at once aroused and the succeeding morning or evening paper is sure to contain a "go-him-one-better" inducement to attract shoppers. Last spring one wholesaler cleaned house by introducing a sale of plants at one store and the other store immediately secured a large supply from another greenhouse and in the merry war that resulted, retail prices regardless of cost reached a point "unfit for publication," as our friends, the Jackson & Perkins Co., would say. Naturally the local retail florists suffered, temporarily at least, and are inclined to think the matter should be controlled in some manner, while the wholesalers thought the plants would be obtained elsewhere if not from them. The question was referred to the grievance committee, to be reported upon at the January meeting. GE DALE.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Saturday supplies were short of the demand and cut-flower prices advanced sharply. The week opened with almost zero weather, a sudden change that boded no comfort for the plantsmen and for the retail florists, for the necessity of wrapping every plant. Orders had been booked during the latter part of the week and on Sunday that made retailers feel on easy street so far as their hampers and baskets of blooming plants were concerned. The final rounding up of the generous givers on Monday maintained the reputation of the past years for plant Christmases and cleaned up everything of value or beauty in plant specimen or combination. Then, of necessity, the desire for cut flowers was given more encouragement.

The growers with stands at the market opened at 5 o'clock, as is the custom on holidays, and a big crowd was in attendance. Prices were reasonable, and in an hour every grower had completed the sale of his stock, and by 8 o'clock the big exchange was empty. The regulars, Frank Millang, Bonnet Bros., Chas. Smith and W. H. Siebrecht, held the fort, as usual, during the balance of the day and were kept busy.

On the floor below the Cut Flower Co., Moore, Hentz & Nash, Noe and the other expert rose and carnation growers who here dispense their stock, opened as usual, at 8 o'clock, and soon the room was noisy with a host of buyers of every tongue and nation. In the babble I could distinguish Joe Millang's dictum "Best Beauties one and a half," and some of the best Maids and Brides on this floor were held for 30 cents. The pickled stock, wherever it was seen, and there was some of it everywhere, made one feel like 30 cents to look at it.

In the commission houses Beauties were sold in lots of 1,000 or more to some of the leading retailers. Some grand Beauty stock came from Philadelphia. The finest of the orchids touched $1 in the evening. Carnations, except for the novelties, sold at from $8 to $15 per hundred. The Cottage Gardens output, as usual, was wonderful and varied. Victory was in great demand, so were all the reds and crimsons, and at top prices.

The streets were flooded with stevia. Smilax was abundant. Lilies were few and $2 a dozen was the asking price. There seemed to be more than enough valley to go round.

In one of the Rhinebeck papers an advertisement urged the growers to make a united effort to force violets to $2. Copies of this reached the wholesalers in the late afternoon and caused quite a sensation. The general opinion was that there was danger of the severe illness of the goose that lays the golden eggs, or, in clearer terms, an inevitable and serious slump in the violet market after the holiday is over.

All the plantsmen are delighted. Not a desirable or salable plant is left unsold. Everybody seems to have calculated wisely and if any error has been made it is in conservatism, for there is not now and never will be a surplus of well grown plants that these cities within a radius of twenty miles of New York cannot handle profitably and surely. Great quantities have been shipped away, some of them over 1,000 miles, and more and more each year the expert growers of the east are called upon to satisfy the growing demand from the west, south and north of us.

Various Notes.

Alex McConnell has added to his big store in the Arcade on Fifth avenue two other stores in the same building, greatly increasing his conveniences thereby. He found them especially useful for the Christmas trade, which was far ahead of any former year in his long career. Last week on the Crown Prince Frederick he shipped for a customer to Queen Alexandra, of England, six dozen American Beauties, the roses being taken by special messenger from Plymouth to London. They were grown by L. M. Noe, of Madison, and reached their destination in perfect condition. This is the fourth shipment Mr. McConnell has made to the Queen of England.

McManus reports many shipments of orchids and a fine demand from all over the country, with all the popular varieties in stock and a fair supply for all demands.

The sales of wreathing and holly have been enormous. All the green goods men have had extra forces at work night and day. The prices of holly and Christmas trees have been firm, the latter averaging higher than for many years. Mistletoe, the imported, was hardly equal in quality to that of other years, but the demand soon left the market bare.

The supply men all report the greatest Christmas in their experience, without an exception. The Geller Co., located in its big new store just in time. They have made a great advance. Reed & Keller say the last year has beaten all its predecessors and every month has shown a satisfactory increase. Immortelles were not to be had at any price. The country is growing faster floriculturally in every line than the greatest optimist ever dreamed possible.

In the holiday season many of the retailers increase their active forces to double regular size and some old familiar faces appear as reminders of days gone by. In Small & Sons, Wm. Plumb is enjoying a vacation as one of the lieutenants in this strenuous center.

Mr. Merritt, formerly with J. M. Hodgson & Co., on Fifth avenue, is now in charge of the Siegel & Cooper conservatories and his master hand and expert management are already apparent there and in the cut flower department of the firm as well. The large greenhouses are splendidly stocked with the choicest goods and a large increase in the volume of business has developed since Mr. Merritt assumed control.

At Bloomingdale's, W. W. Burnham has built up a wonderful business on legitimate lines, antagonizing none of the best retail trade of the city and maintaining similar prices to those which obtain in the retail stores of Broadway and Fifth avenue.

Over in Brooklyn at Loeser's, C. C. Trefel manages his immense trade in a similar way and with his own $1,500 team and delivery wagons and all needed facilities he has sold this Christmas 2,500 poinsettias in pots, 2,500 araucarias and over 2,000 azaleas, besides 5,000 fern dishes and palms and ferns innumerable. Last Easter his sales of azaleas totaled 18,000. On December 26 he had the elaborate decoration for the Brooklyn Heights casino. Mrs. Trefel is in charge of the cut flower department. These department store florists, once a menace, have become adjuncts and educators, enhancing the public interest in floriculture.

A great many growers of roses and violets were in the city last week, investigating the Christmas market prospects. Among them were Judson Traver and P. Tremper, of Rhinebeck.

These violets men up the state are growing in numbers rapidly and growing in wealth as well. Little wonder there is no other industry in Dutchess county worthy of the name. Every violet grower is an aristocrat. Even the beginners, with their two or three 100-foot houses put by enough money in the winter to take a trip to Europe and build another house or two for the next season.

The Charles H. Fox Co. has been incorporated under the laws of the state of New York, the principal offices being stated to be in New York city. The authorized capital stock is $25,000 and the incorporators are Charles H. Fox, Philadelphia; J. Hirsch and W. Jacobs, New York city. It is understood that it is the purpose of Mr. Fox to start a New York store.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Yes, it was a good Christmas. There was plenty of stock, after all, and every one got all he wanted, and that was a good deal. The weather turned cold Saturday night and we had a cold, white Christmas, and while this weather has helped business it has been hard on the plant men and has made plenty of extra work wrapping to protect from freezing, but there is no complaint, for everyone has made money.

After a week of snow, rain, and generally sloppy weather, Saturday night found the retail florists in a good humor, as trade had been all that had been expected of it. Green goods of all kinds cleaned up nicely and plants never sold so well, but there probably never was as good stock offered for sale in this city. Immortelles, statice and other wreaths and decorations could scarcely be made up fast enough to satisfy the demand. The retail stores never looked so well nor had so many pretty things in them.

Various Notes.

Breitenstein & Flemm have their shop decorated with artificial poinsettias and these, with the exquisite plants and artistic wreaths, were worth going a mile to see.

Mrs. E. A. Williams' shop was as pretty as a picture. The general arrangement is always artistic, but the addition of such plants, baskets, wreaths and other novelties made it a paradise where even one in the trade found it hard to keep his money in his pocket.

A. W. Smith made a general change in his large store, putting all workmen out of sight and decorating the whole shop with natural poinsettias from six inches to eight feet high, and the effect he got with these flowers and Whitmani ferns was grand.

H. L. Blind & Bros. were not behind in any respect. Their azaleas, poinsettias, oranges, and various red-berried plants, and handsome cut flowers of their own growing, kept their store filled with buyers.

L. I. Neff, with four stores to look after, forgot his amusement interests entirely and was so busy keeping up a stock of his own novelties (red baskets filled with red immortelles and boxwood, and red bells by the thousands) that his force has been working day and night for several weeks.

Randolph & McClements, in the east end, had their beautiful store filled with everything one could think of in the way of plants for Christmas, and were busy with large decorations.

The Siebert Co. outdid itself in pretty combinations of red and green, both in plants and made-up wreaths.

P. S. Randolph, of Randolph & McClements, has sold the lot, 50x150 feet, at present occupied by their store, for $100,000 cash. This will compel them to change the location of the store in the spring. Hoo-Hoo.

Randolph & McClements have bought the business of P. Siebert, the east end florist, including greenhouses on Stanton avenue, Eighteenth ward, and the lease on the building at Baum and Beatty streets. The lot is 100x120 feet and the present building occupies the front half of it. Randolph & McClements, as their lease is a long one, will erect a large building on the rear half of the lot at Beatty and Commerce streets and will remove their store to that location next spring.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Last week opened with a rush, and it still continues and the outlook is encouraging. It is feared cut blooms will be scarce, however. The growers are rushing in anything that is a bloom, and find a steady demand.

Carnations are bringing from $6 to $10. Roses are still scarce, but violets are more plentiful, and everything will be used up. American Beauties are steady and find ready demand. Callas are selling at $2 per dozen. Stevia and all sorts of bulbs are used up. There is quite a demand this year for poinsettia and immortelles. Christmas trees sold well. Norway spruce and Boston spruce seemed to be the leaders. Pine trees were hard to find. Many cedars were sent in and sold as low as 15 cents. Holly can be had in any amount at a reasonable price, in fact, greens of all kinds are plentiful and in demand.

Various Notes.

Frederick Reitz, of Franklintown, Md., has completed a new house for storing potted plants.

T. W. Gray has again secured his stall in the market. He has been hampered by a new building erected on the corner he formerly occupied.

Thomas Vincent, of West Baltimore street, is about again, attending to business.

Mrs. W. Haeckel, 1418 Pennsylvania avenue, has added to her store a side line of assorted candies.

Lohr & Fritze are sending in some fine poinsettias in 6-inch pans.

John Cook, North Charles street, is displaying some fine plants of German holly.

C. J. Gregorius, of Arlington, has a fine stock of azaleas. J. L. T.

Samuel Feast & Sons, with Gilbert J. Daily as manager, have opened a store at 1408 North Charles street. The store is under the Garage building and is fitted with up-to-date fixtures.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

All kinds of stock has been very scarce for Christmas week. Carnations sold at from $8 to $10 per hundred for good blooms. Roses were also pretty much cleaned up. The growers found ready sale for all flowering stuff; pot plants sold better in this than in other years, the demand being about equal to the supply.

The cloudy weather in this vicinity for the last month gave all stock a setback. Growing carnations in Cleveland is about like growing them in a cellar. We have had little or no sunlight.

Various Notes.

ELBERON, N. J.

A large and interesting meeting of the Elberon Horticultural Society was held on the evening of December 17. The feature of the evening was a paper on "Chrysanthemum Culture," read by C. H. Totty, of Madison, N. J. Mr. Totty touched upon many points, and the paper was both interesting and instructive.

There were some fine flowers staged, as follows: Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, Peter Murray; stevias, A. Baeur; Paper White narcissis, James Kennedy; poinsettias and mushrooms, W. D. Robertson; orange tree in fruit, Henry Wood; celery and cauliflower, Fred W. Dettlinger and violets and leek by a Greek. All the exhibits scored above the average. A general discussion closed the meeting. F. W. D.

WESTERLY, R. I.

Just before Christmas is the best time of the year to make a tour of the growers, when crops are just right and everything points to a big harvest. Some growers have a habit of offering an excuse for stocks being off crop, but the successful man is he who can keep up a succession and at no season be out.

S. J. Reuter has roses and carnations all the year round. Thousands of rooted cuttings in pots are ready and look thrifty. One of the strongest is Fisher's new scarlet, Beacon. Craig and Harlowarden are the standard scarlets. Queen Louise, Queen and Vesper are the whites. White Perfection is grand. It would delight the eyes of Fred Dorner could he take a peep at this house just now. Variegated Lawson is freer than

During the last few days I have seen it in enormous crop, but at no place heavier than here. That old favorite, Mrs. Lawson, is not doing so well with some, but as seen here, in an old range of houses, "there's nothing to beat it," as Mr. Reuter says. He is adding two houses, each 35x200 feet, for White Lawson alone.

the latest addition being one even-span house 46x500 feet. Another of the same dimension is going up adjoining this, but allowing a space of fifteen feet for light. Mr. Reuter is a strong advocate of large houses and intends eventually to have nothing less than 200-foot lengths for carnations and 500-foot lengths for roses. Killarney is at home here. W. E. Doyle, the well-known caterer to Boston's bon-ton flower lovers, claims the honor of making the first sale of this rose in the bean city. Wellesley is a fine companion. Stock planted out of 3-inch pots in June is throwing canes five feet in length, with big buds. Chatenay completed the trio of pink-tinted roses. Richmond stands alone, having superseded all others of its color. Bride cannot be beaten, although Kaiserin is throwing a big crop. The pink Kaiserin, Jules Grolez, will be given a trial here. Bridesmaid is grown extensively for an everyday rose. Chrysanthemums are past, with the exception of Jeanne Nonin, which is a fine late white; every bloom is perfect in form and color.

Mr. Reuter is covering part of the thirty-five acres he owns in the village with frames for hardy stock. He is also building dwellings for his help and frame buildings for his live stock. The farm of ninety-eight acres, just outside the town, furnishes the soil that conduces to produce the stock for which Westerly is famous. W. M.

ELBERON, N. J.

A large and interesting meeting of the Elberon Horticultural Society was held on the evening of December 17. The feature of the evening was a paper on "Chrysanthemum Culture," read by C. H. Totty, of Madison, N. J. Mr. Totty touched upon many points, and the paper was both interesting and instructive.

There were some fine flowers staged, as follows: Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, Peter Murray; stevias, A. Baeur; Paper White narcissis, James Kennedy; poinsettias and mushrooms, W. D. Robertson; orange tree in fruit, Henry Wood; celery and cauliflower, Fred W. Dettlinger and violets and leek by a Greek. All the exhibits scored above the average. A general discussion closed the meeting. F. W. D.

WESTERLY, R. I.

Just before Christmas is the best time of the year to make a tour of the growers, when crops are just right and everything points to a big harvest. Some growers have a habit of offering an excuse for stocks being off crop, but the successful man is he who can keep up a succession and at no season be out.

S. J. Reuter has roses and carnations all the year round. Thousands of rooted cuttings in pots are ready and look thrifty. One of the strongest is Fisher's new scarlet, Beacon. Craig and Harlowarden are the standard scarlets. Queen Louise, Queen and Vesper are the whites. White Perfection is grand. It would delight the eyes of Fred Dorner could he take a peep at this house just now. Variegated Lawson is freer than the latest addition being one even-span house 46x500 feet. Another of the same dimension is going up adjoining this, but allowing a space of fifteen feet for light. Mr. Reuter is a strong advocate of large houses and intends eventually to have nothing less than 200-foot lengths for carnations and 500-foot lengths for roses. Killarney is at home here. W. E. Doyle, the well-known caterer to Boston's bon-ton flower lovers, claims the honor of making the first sale of this rose in the bean city. Wellesley is a fine companion. Stock planted out of 3-inch pots in June is throwing canes five feet in length, with big buds. Chatenay completed the trio of pink-tinted roses. Richmond stands alone, having superseded all others of its color. Bride cannot be beaten, although Kaiserin is throwing a big crop. The pink Kaiserin, Jules Grolez, will be given a trial here. Bridesmaid is grown extensively for an every-day rose. Chrysanthemums are past, with the exception of Jeanne Nonin, which is a fine late white; every bloom is perfect in form and color.

Mr. Reuter is covering part of the thirty-five acres he owns in the village with frames for hardy stock. He is also building dwellings for his help and frame buildings for his live stock. LETTUCE WORM.

I send two worms (one cocoon) that I found in large numbers on my lettuce in the garden in early fall and as my first crop from the greenhouse plants were outside until September 15 I have found several of them on the field-grown lettuce indoors recently. It appears to be a species of the cabbage worm but I had never known it to be found on lettuce. Please examine and let me know what it is and what remedy you would suggest for it. L. G.

The sample sent is what is commonly called the green lettuce worm. It does not feed entirely on lettuce, though it shows a special preference for it as a diet. The best means of getting rid of them indoors is by hand picking. Though they usually keep on the under side of the leaf, it is easy to see by the mutilated leaves where they are working.

They are not apt to appear in large quantities on the lettuce, as the butterfly that lays the eggs hibernates for the winter. The eggs have no doubt been taken indoors on the plants and, with the warm atmosphere provided, have hatched out. Remedies like slugshot, tobacco, etc., would be all right to kill the warms but these leave the plants dirty and, being hard to clean off, would certainly not improve the flavor of the lettuce. Outdoors some of these remedies have to be employed, as in the open hand picking is out of the question, especially for large plantations, but if put on as a preventive when the plants are small the rain may be counted on to pretty well clean the plants before they are ready for use. W. S. Croydon.

FEEDING.

The present is a season when practically no feeding should be given to vegetables forced under glass, as the dull, cloudy weather renders the plants inactive to a certain degree. It is the action of sunlight on the foliage that enables the plants to draw up and assimilate the plant foods which go to build up the tissues and strengthen the plants. Hence at this season, when we are getting the mimimum of sunshine, the requirements of the plants in respect to plant foods must also be at a minimum. Therefore, if feeding material is applied it must be to a large extent wasted, besides clogging up the soil with chemical matter to the exclusion of the free passage of air, this causing more or less sourness in the soil and rendering the roots of the plants less active than they would otherwise be. Under such conditions the plants will make a soft growth and fall an easy prey to fungus and other diseases.

All efforts during the dull, short days should be directed towards keeping the plants as firm in growth as possible by avoiding anything that will induce soft growth and by giving all the fresh air that can safely be given. Then, when the proper season comes, the plants will be in the best possible condition to assimilate the plant foods.

The time at which feeding material can safely be applied will depend a good deal on the season, but as a rule about the middle of February the lengthening days and the increasing amount of sunshine increase the action of the plants to a degree sufficient to enable them to profit by the application of feeding material.

Strong feeders, such as tomatoes and cucumbers, should be the first to receive feeding. The material to be used will depend a good deal on the quality of the soil in which the plants are growing. Soils are seldom found that are evenly balanced in the matter of plant foods, and the grower should endeavor to ascertain the elements in which his soil is lacking and apply manures accordingly, also taking into consideration the requirements of the plants in hand.

Bone meal makes a good general fertilizer, both for cucumbers and tomatoes, but for soils lacking in nitrogen, blood and bone is preferable. Guano also is good when a good grade can be procured, but the different brands vary considerably in strength and composition. Hen and pigeon manure are both rich in phosphoric acid and are valuable fertilizers, but must be used in small quantities or damage may result.

Barnyard manure is about as good a general manure as can be had, but is best mixed in the soil before it is put in the beds, though a good liquid manure can be made from the fresh cow manure by mixing it at the rate of one bushel to fifty gallons of water. A good liquid also is made from sheep manure by putting one bushel in a bag and soaking in fifty gallons of water. After standing a day or two the liquid from this would be too strong to apply as it is at first, so should be diluted about half and half with clear water. After taking off the liquid the barrel or tank should be filled up and allowed to stand for a couple of days. The liquid resulting from this will be about the right strength to apply. Liquid can also be made from hen manure the same way, but as this is strong material it should be well diluted at first.

Sulphate of ammonia and nitrate of soda are two quick acting manures, useful as stimulants in carrying through a crop that is near completion.

Either of these latter manures may be used on lettuce, but only when the days are long and the weather clear and bright, so that plenty of fresh air can be given to keep the growth firm and prevent damping. Applied in the short days of winter, harm to the plants would be sure to result. W. S. Croydon.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

THE market gardeners are astir. They fear inability to procure seed of their favorite strains.

THE after Christmas lull will give some of the seedsmen a chance to adjust onion seed prices.

SOME of the posted ones state that the green-podded beans will not bring the prices they did last year.

THE general demand for advanced prices on contract orders is not meeting with the resistance the grower feared.

IT is a safe guess that nobody knows what onion sets will be worth in the spring, unless they have the amount nominated on the bond.

SPEAKING of onion seed, there is one good thing to be noted, and that is the fact that there is no supply of the Globe varieties to be had from promiscuous sources.

THE two representatives of the California seed growing interests, who are the only ones thus far engaged in an eastern trip this season, report business booked up to the limit of their resources.

WITH the exception of beans and potatoes, the prices in the 1906 retail catalogues would do just as well for 1907, and those who depend on the cut rate for their trade would be just about as far below the quality pushers.

THERE is wide call for reliable seeds of forcing strains of lettuce, cucumber, radish, etc. The seedsman who establishes, through advertising, a wide reputation for reliable stock will have a permanent asset in a steady mail order trade.

IT doesn't look as though congress is very anxious to legislate on free seeds, the tariff, the parcels post, or any other of the weighty subjects before it, when it takes a holiday recess from December 20 to January 3. The session ends March 4, 1907.

THE general catalogue of Walter P. Stokes, Philadelphia, was received December 21. It prices Yellow Globe onion at $2.75 and White Globe at $3.50; Wardwell's, Davis' and Refugee wax beans at $6; Alaska peas, $4.50; turnip beets, 65 cents to 75 cents per pound.

THE Burpee Farm Annual for 1907 came to hand December 26. It is of the usual size and style, 200 pages. Aside from the Burpee prices, which always are of interest to other catalogue houses, the greatest interest will be in the announcement of two new bush lima beans, Fordhook bush lima and the Burpee Improved bush lima. These originated with Henry Fish, Santa Barbara, Cal., in 1903, in a crop of Challenger pole lima. C. C. Morse & Co. are quoted as saying these beans are far ahead of any other limas. The Burpee price on Southport Red Globe is $2.50; Yellow Globe, $2.75; White Globe, $3.50; Alaska peas, $4.50 bu.

Chas. P. Guelf, of the Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., accompanied by Mrs. Guelf, is spending the holiday season at the Sherman House, Chicago.

When the pea grower goes out in search of contract business for the coming year's delivery he ought to be able to get at least 50 cents per bushel more than he did last year.

La Porte, Ind., has just had a most successful "corn show," under the auspices of the farmers' institute and for prizes designed to encourage seed selection, looking toward increased yields.

Horace J. Wright, late secretary of the English National Sweet Pea Society, journalist, etc., has commenced business as a seed merchant and specialist in sweet peas, at 32 Dault road, Wandsworth, London.

IMPORTS.

The imports of seeds through the port of New York for the week ending December 21 were as follows:

Kind.	Bags.	Val.	Kind.	Bags.	Val.
Annatto	3	$ 29	Fennel	32	$ 475
Anise	110	1,087	Grass	168	1,762

Coriander	310	1,050	Sug. beet	1,500	10,985
Cummin	300	3,292	Other		10,825

In the same period the imports of plants, bulbs, etc., were of the aggregate value of $28,666.

NOTES FROM HOLLAND.

A continuation of the most unusual summer-like weather marked the month of November, and not only have bulb plantings been finished under the most favorable conditions known for years, but the winter covering of bulb fields has been laid without any interruption. With the exception of a single night frost to help the leaves off the trees, fully a month later than any other year, not a single sharp frost has reminded us of the approach of winter.

However, such unusual behavior in nature has not been without effect on the bulbs that had been planted early in the season, and in many places the growth above the ground is already very considerable. Bulb sales have now come to an end, and generally little surplus stock has been left on the hands of the grower. Only the spiræa has moved slowly; but liliums and lily of the valley have sold well and have been cleared out at satisfactory prices.

Seed crops have now nearly all been harvested, and, notwithstanding the fine summer and autumn, some crops, like radish and carrots, have not been up to expectation.—Horticultural Trade Journal.

SEASONS AND SEEDS.

"It is greatly to be desired that we should have a couple of cold winters with hot summers of the real old-fashioned sort," a representative of a large Columbus seed house is reported as saying. "We must have seasonable conditions now or suffer a great deal in the not distant future for lack of many varieties of vegetable food, essential to cheap and healthful living.

"If we don't have at least two or three sharp winters and as many hot summers the people will suffer greatly from lack of vegetables. It is almost a necessity that the next three or four months give us plenty of snow and cold. Many vegetables show signs of deterioration, peas and beans being the chief sufferers so far. The seeds of these two sent out this year must be handled with a great deal of care if even fair crops are to result. The mild winters and the cool, moist summers have almost robbed them of their germinating qualities.

"Seeds of most of the common vegetables are in much smaller supply than usual. This is true of peas and beans, and is especially true of tomatoes. I don't know that the weather has had any particular effect on the tomato crop, but it has been most unusual. The product this year was never better for table use and for the canner, but there were almost no seeds, except where the late crop was caught in the long spell of early fall rains. These tomatoes went to seed, but the earlier and major portion of the crop went all to pulp. Our house is between ten and twelve tons

EUROPEAN SEED NOTES.

Considering the heavy crop of red clover harvested in England this year it is rather surprising how well prices are maintained. The merchants are doing their utmost to induce growers to thresh and market their clover seed without any delay and thus secure a good market before any quantity of foreign seed is on offer. So far their efforts produced little response and in view of the large crops held by the growers it is almost safe to predict that prices must suffer a rapid decline.

Mangold, beets, radishes, cauliflower, onion, cucumber, marrow and the like, French beans and spinach are among the articles which are quoted dearer this year and are likely to continue to rise in price, probably all over Europe. In flower seeds, asters, stocks, pansies and some few other sorts of annuals are reported higher in price and likely to continue so. Tomatoes, lettuces, leek, carrots, etc., appear to be an average crop and prices not likely to rise much. Cabbage and Savoy are reported short in some European districts but some good harvests in England will make up the deficiency to a certain extent, so that no particular rise may be expected. As already reported, supplies of agricultural seeds are in full supply. These crop reports may appear somewhat late and may, perhaps, repeat many of my previous reports, but they are more to be relied upon coming to hand later and when the crops are fully cleaned.

Seedsmen report a general clean-up of bulbs of all sorts at good prices. Supplementary orders sent to Holland in the majority of cases remained unfilled, there being no bulbs of the popular trade sorts left in the Dutch warehouses after the regular shipments finished. Some few sorts of gladioli have been slow sale but even these are getting practically cleared.

Mild weather has been experienced in Holland during the whole of the planting season and practically the whole of the stock bulbs are under the ground and are already safely protected from frost with the winter covering of reeds and similar material. A less quantity than usual is reported to have been planted by the regular, old-established export firms, but taking into account the large new cultures in the new northern districts there is a larger acreage planted than usual. B. J.

VITALITY OF SEEDS.

While there is some doubt as to the reliability of reports of wheat taken from Egyptian graves of ancient date germinating when planted, many notable, if less wonderful, examples of nature's preservation of the life of seeds come to light from time to time. One of the most noteworthy of these refers to seeds taken from Fort Conger, about 490 miles from the pole, by the Peary party in 1899, having been exposed in this northern climate for a period of sixteen years, their presence there being the result of the Greely expedition of 1883. Packages of lettuce and radish seeds were brought to the United States, and, after a further period of six years, were planted, and while the lettuce seed had lost its vitality, fully one-half of the radish seeds germinated.

ANTHURIUM SEED.

A hint as to the vegetative treatment of the seeds of Anthurium Scherzianum and other species and varieties is given by M. Van Hecke, of Ghent. He states in the Deutsche Gartner Zeitung that the seeds suffer if they be not sown almost directly they are mature, and the best mode of sowing is in shallow pans filled with finely chopped sphagnum one-half and an equal portion of leaf soil, placing the seeds about three-quarters of an inch from each other and putting nothing over them, but lightly pressing the seeds into the mixture. The seedpans receiving an application of water and a sheet of glass over each, and then placing them in the propagating house having a warmth of 65 degrees to 70 degrees. The chief points to observe in raising the seedlings are a constant and regular degree of warmth and of moisture.

FUMIGATING SEEDS.

"As much as forty years ago scientific men," says Burnet Landreth in his address on "The New Agriculture," "indicated to seedsmen the use of several insecticides, principally carbon-bisulphid for the treatment of weevil-infected seeds, or for the treatment, in fact, of any seeds bearing on their surfaces or within them insects or mites. Seedsmen and grain merchants are especially annoyed in the conduct of their business by the depredations of the weevil family which burrow or ensconce themselves notably in the seeds of peas or beans, corn or wheat. These grubs may be killed in their holes by the fumes of carbon bisulphid, to effect which the seedsman erects a room say thirty or forty feet square, lined top, bottom and sides with tin and with a door which can be hermetically sealed. Such a room can be loaded up with a carload, say 600 bushels of peas, beans or anything else.

"A carload of peas or beans thus treated and subjected to the fumes from a gallon of the liquid for thirty hours may then be taken out with all the larva killed, the fumes penetrating not only to the center of the pile, but to the center of every sack. The odor of the fumes soon dissipates, leaving no resultant injury to seed vitality. A more efficient agent is hydrocyanic acid gas, but it is dangerous in the hands of ignorant people."

IN THE SOUTHWEST.

Trade In Its Infancy.

From a commercial viewpoint, all the evidence at hand speaks of progress. Texas is beginning to realize that she can grow cut flowers, and one prominent grower of Dallas has made a start in the right direction, having put up last spring 100,000 square feet of glass, with the intention of doubling it next year. These houses are up-to-date and no expense was spared to make them the best in the country. He grows all the new kinds of roses and carnations, along with the best standard sorts, also the general runs of cut flowers and greens, doing a wholesale business only. It is such a place as the small florists of this state have been needing, where they can get their flowers in a hurry.

From all over the state reports come of new houses going up for retail use, but one of the greatest things the florists of this state have to contend with is to get expert help. There is a good chance for such help down here, and after getting used to the weather and the state they could get good wages.

In cut flowers, carnations have been grown more than any other flower. Roses under glass up to the present have not been a great success, although a San Antonio grower does them well, and I think some of the other growers will take rose culture up in the near future. Roses do finely in the open ground, and can be cut up to November. Small roses out of 2-inch pots were in great demand, the orders for some kinds having been hard to fill last spring. All the houses sending out catalogues are now getting out elaborate spring catalogues, with the expectation of 1907 being the best ever.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

J. O'Connor plants ten-week stocks as soon as mums are cleared off in his place at Providence, R. I. Two new houses are planted to Enchantress, Queen Louise, Lady Bountiful, Cardinal and Nelson carnations. Richmond is the only red rose grown. Violets are scarce. The funeral of the late mayor called for large numbers. Twenty thousand were used to line the grave. Some big orders for wedding decorations are to be filled this week.

M. Sweeney, of Providence, reports business satisfactory, and Johnny Wood can hardly find time to talk. He has the contract to decorate the new seed store, which is one of the handsomest in the east.

T. Barclay, of Pawtucket, R. I., intends giving up cut flowers and substituting green stuff. The houses are well adapted for this purpose, and, as the demand is always in excess of the supply, he doubtless is doing the correct thing.

William Hoffman, of Pawtucket, has given up the decorating branch of his business, finding it more profitable to utilize the space for flowering stock. He has a neat and attractive place.

T. J. Johnson says the sale of plants is on the increase in Pawtucket. He has orders booked for 500 Begonia Gloire de Lorraine alone. Some of the choicest stock of S. J. Reuter finds its way here.

E. W. Clark, of New London, Conn., who for many years managed the John Spalding place, has built an up-to-date plant in the uptown section of the city and reports excellent business. Funeral work at this time comes high when flowers are scarce.

At the store of S. J. Reuter, New London, I found the artists all busy. The neat decorations, as here seen, are full of suggestion. W. M.

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. Delivery January 5 to 10 and later. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

...THE...

Chrysanthemum

By Arthur Herrington

Formerly president Chrysanthemum Society of America.

The most complete and comprehensive work on the cultivation of the chrysanthemum that has yet been published in America. Its scope and character may be gleaned from the list of contents, which comprises chapters on composts; planting; benches, boxes or pots; general cultural details; crown and terminal buds; feeding, its object and application; care of the buds; exhibition and judging; specimen plants, plants in pots; raising from seed and hybridizing; sports; hardy chrysanthemums; chrysanthemums for south and west; insect pests and diseases; classification and selection of varieties for special purposes; history of the chrysanthemum, etc. The book will be welcomed for the lucid, comprehensive, as well as the practical character of its contents. Handsomely illustrated. 168 pages, 5x7 inches. Price 50c postpaid.

PACIFIC COAST.

All southern California is rejoicing in the rains that have been so plentiful the last twenty days. The florists are complaining at the loss of some outdoor flowers but under-glass stock is fine.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Rudolph Fischer, of Great Neck, L. I., has bought five acres of land about twelve miles from Los Angeles and has built a house and planted about an acre of Freesia Purity. Mr. Fischer's family already is living on the place and Mr. Fischer intends to join his people here in the spring.

The founder of the Woodburn Nurseries, Woodburn, Ore., was J. H. Settlemier, a pioneer of '49, having crossed the plains by ox team when a boy 9 years of age, and has lived in the Willamette valley ever since. He worked in the nursery of his father, afterwards going into business for himself at the present location in 1863, continuing until 1892, when his son, F. W. Settlemier, succeeded to the ownership.

It is stated that the demand for young peach trees for planting in the famous peach region adjacent to Yuba City, Cal., will be greater this year than in years gone by. In fact, the demand has spread into sections heretofore unknown to be good peach soils. The canneries are yearly increasing their output of fruit, and the demand for peaches is exceeding the output. It is understood that local nurseries are overwhelmed with orders for peach trees.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We are in the midst of the holidays, and from present indications the season will be exceptional. Business, both in the stores and with the wholesale growers, has been good for the last month. The price and quality of all classes of stock has shown a steady advancement and the demands have, for the last two weeks, exceeded the supply. The weather is ideal at the present writing and gives every indication of remaining so for several days at least. Warm sunshiny days and cool nights have a tendency to bring crowds of people out of their homes and never has the season been any gayer.

Although we have only a third of our usual quota of stores, all the growers are busy with both local and shipping trade. There is no apparent scarcity of any one article at present, except violets, and we have not as yet had sufficient moisture to suit their demands. Valley, which has been scarce, is now in abundant supply and is bringing good prices.

Berries, mistletoe and huckelberry are being sold by the ton, and the general supply of all kinds of green goods does not exceed the demands.

In all the bay towns the same conditions seem to prevail, and I think it is safe to predict we will have a banner holiday trade. G.

THE UNIVERSITY FARM.

E. J. Wickson has returned from a trip to Hanford, where he attended the annual growers' convention. A feature of this gathering was the reading of a paper by Prof. Wickson on the "Horticultural Uses of the University Farm." Without directly referring to the effort on the part of Fresno county people to have the main experiment station of the university located on the M. Theodore Kearney property near Fresno, and the abandonment of the Davisville horticultural grounds, Prof. Wickson made it clear that there was room for both farms and that the Fresno property would, in accordance with the wishes of the donor, be used for horticultural research and experiment.

He said that Mr. Kearney's gift of 5,400 acres of valuable land to the state stands for a declaration of his dying faith that whatever the state may provide and maintain for horticultural training and research there is ample opportunity and demand that much more shall be done by individual gift and bequest. He described at some length the farm purchased by the state near Davisville and also the Kearney property, both of which, he said, were admirably adapted to the uses to which they are to be put.

Continuing, he stated that this rich inheritance which comes to the state, must be taken as evidence of two things: First, the research work and the popular presentation of its results, by Prof. Hilgard and his staff during the last third of a century has convinced the people of California that the fullest knowledge of California conditions of climate, of soils and cultures must be had for intelligent and profitable pursuit of the industries which are based upon them. Second, that the equipment and facilities of the department for teaching the practical arts, in accordance with the scientific demonstration of local conditions, were pitiably meager and inadequate.

Hence arose the popular demand that the college should undertake instruction in California farm practice on much broader lines than it has ever taken hitherto, and it should do this under actual conditions, on an easily accessible and widely representative horticultural farm; and should adopt such instruction to the needs and requirements of those who secure a livelihood directly from any branch of horticulture.

That the legislature from the popular demand, and Mr. Kearney from his own convictions, should place all this value in the hands of the College of Horticulture is a complete demonstration that the foundation laid by it in horticultural science was recognized as sound and enduring, and the men who had given their lives, hitherto, to the building of the foundations, could best direct the expansion on the practical side of instruction, so that the culture of the soil, known to be practicable under California conditions, should be faithfully and accurately taught. Thus the recent state law, indorsed by Mr. Kearney's magnificent gift, becomes an incontrovertible decision, that horticultural research and instruction shall be henceforth entrusted to that department of the University of California, in accordance with the organic act which brought this institution into existence forty years ago. AT SALEM, ORE.

The illustration opposite is from a photograph of the new establishment of C. F. Ruef, at Salem, Ore. It consists of two houses, each 20x100 feet. The construction is modern in all its features. Heating by hot water is from a boilerhouse at the left, water supply being by the windmill and tank shown in the picture. One house is devoted to carnations, the other to mums, callas and greens.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Christmas business is now a thing of history for this year. As was expected, all kinds of stock was scarce and everything sold at a good figure. I should say that, in consequence of the scarcity, the average price of stock was higher than at any time for many years. About everything that came in had been ordered many times over and had to be divided pro rata. Roses were in better supply than carnations, but that is not saying much. Red roses were scarce and the available stock was not a drop in the bucket. Most orders for Liberty, Richmond or Beauty had to be turned down.

There were quite a few holdover mums, which helped out wonderfully and brought high prices. Poinsettias sold better. Narcissi, Romans, valley and stevia sold out clean. Violets were in heavy demand and the supply was not equal to it.

It is still too early to speak of the volume of business done, but there can be no doubt of its having been fully up to last year in dollars and cents, if not in volume of stock handled. And, after all, that is what counts. The weather is very cold at night, but it is clear and the sun shines most of the time.

Various Notes.

Fred Gear celebrated the holidays by erecting a large electric sign in front of his store, which can be seen for several blocks. Mr. Gear expects to make it a permanent fixture.

If you want to spend an enjoyable and profitable evening don't forget the next meeting of the Florists' Society, January 12, at 8 p. m. It is expected to be the banner meeting of the year.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

THE American gooseberry mildew is just now the subject of voluminous discussion in the British gardening papers.

THE Ben Davis apple crop this year may show a great improvement in quantity but the fruit is just as tasteless as ever.

IT is the general prediction that next spring's clean-up will be the closest since the production of nursery stock became so tremendous.

THE proposition of Wm. Smith, Geneva, N. Y., to endow Hobart College with a half a million for a women's annex, has been accepted.

NURSERYMEN in Germany make much complaint that the prices of fruit trees, as a result of overproduction, have fallen to an unprofitable level.

RICE BROS., of Geneva, N. Y., will grow nursery stock, seeds, etc. The capitalization is $35,000. The incorporators are: John F. Rice, Terrence W. Rice and O. J. C. Rose.

THE nurserymen of the West Chester, Pa., section are enjoying one of the longest seasons in the history of the business and are still busy planting trees and shrubbery about the country, the ground being in good condition for the work. As long as the weather remains partly open the work will go on.

D. L. Viets, of Warren, O., died December 20, at the state hospital at Masillon. He had been in failing health for more than a year past. Death was attributed to paresis. Mr. Viets's father was Alonzo Viets, who left Connecticut and settled at Fowler, O. The son was for a number of years engaged in the nursery business at Warren. He was a member of the Christian Church at that place and was an honored citizen. He leaves a widow, Mrs. Helen Viets, and four sons.

NEW NINNESOTA NURSERY.

The Blue Earth County Nursery Co. is an organization recently started at Mankato, Minn. Ole Andengaard is the president and treasurer and M. L. Gjestrum manager. The company has leased sixty-two acres of land in East Mankato and will grow both fruit and ornamental stock.

Mr. Andengaard is one of the substantial men of Blue Earth county, who is a practical farmer. Mr. Gjestrum has made the nursery business his life work. He is a graduate of the agricultural college at Ames, Ia., and was for eleven years with the Sherman Nursery Co., at Charles City, Ia. There ought to be a good field at Mankato for a nursery, as several of the smaller towns of the state with not near the shipping facilities or territory that Mankato has have thriving nurseries.

VIOLATE PENNSYLVANIA LAW.

State Inspector Surface, at Harrisburg, has been working for months to ascertain the truth of some charges that infected nursery stock is being shipped into Pennsylvania, and has obtained evidence that will probably lead to some arrests under the law of 1905. The shipment of trees into Pennsylvania without fumigation and certificate is a flat violation of the law, and no railroad company can accept for shipment into Pennsylvania trees which have not the certificate of fumigation. In the face of this, it is said at the capitol that the officers of the division have obtained positive evidence that trees have been shipped from nurseries in Ohio and New York into Pennsylvania without the process of fumigation. It is probable that the railroad companies will be prosecuted. The actions will be the first of the kind, and if it is decided to prosecute the shipment of non-certified trees will speedily cease.

SULPHUR.

Sulphur has been known from the earliest times, as it occurs in the free or native state in the neighborhood of extinct as well as active volcanoes. It was formerly termed brimstone, and was considered by the alchemists to be the principle of combustibility and believed by them to represent the alterability of metals by fire. The compounds of this element occur in nature in much larger quantities and are much more widely distributed than sulphur itself.

Until recently nearly all of the sulphur of commerce was derived from the volcanic district of the Island of Sicily, where it occurs in widespread masses, being imbedded in a matrix of marl, limestone, gypsum and celestine.

The sulphur occurs partly in transparent, yellow crystals termed virgin sulphur, and partly in opaque crystalline masses, to which the name of volcanic sulphur is given. Both of these varieties are separated from the matrix by a process of fusion. The general process used is as follows:

An excavation about ten meters in diameter and about two and a half meters in depth arranged with a slanting bottom so an opening can be made from the lowest portion, and the sulphur as it melts may flow out. These holes are built up with masses of gypsum and the inside covered with a coating of plaster of paris. The calcaroni, as these kilns are termed, are then filled with the sulphur ore, which is built up on top in the form of a cone. The whole heap is then coated over with powdered ore, and this again covered with a layer of burnt-out ore, after which the sulphur is lighted at the bottom. By permitting the heat to penetrate very slowly into the mass the sulphur is gradually melted, and, running away by the opening at the bottom, it is caught in molds. This is the ordinary brimstone of commerce.

The sulphur obtained by liquation from the calcaroni (brimstone) is not sufficiently pure for all purposes and has to be submitted to a process of refining; this is termed subliming, and consists in converting the sulphur into a vapor, which is reconverted into solid sulphur in a condensing chamber. This process may be briefly described as follows:

The sulphur is placed in a retort under which a fire is built. When the retort becomes sufficiently heated the sulphur begins to pass as vapor into the condensing chamber. The vapor, immediately on coming into contact with the cold chamber, is chilled and falls as a minutely divided solid. These flowers, as they are called, adhering to the walls and top and bottom of the chamber, are removed before the chamber gets hot, which is the case after a few days' working, as the heat which the sulphur has taken up in order to become vaporized is given out to the walls of the chamber, which thus acquire so high a temperature as to fuse or melt sulphur, so that it can no longer become solid on the walls or the chamber, but condenses on the walls in a liquid form and runs to the bottom, where it collects. This distilled sulphur is run out through an opening into molds and is called stick or roll sulphur. The stick or roll sulphur is then ground into a very fine powder, which is termed flour sulphur.

From the above brief description it will be seen that the grade of sulphur known in the trade as flowers is formed by sublimation and condensation in the form of minute particles before the walls of the chamber become greatly heated, and that the flour sulphur is secured by grinding the stick or roll brimstone, which is formed by the sulphur fumes being fused by the heated walls of the chamber.

In the process of subliming sulphur the impurities do not volatilize but are left behind in the retort, and thus the sublimated sulphur is entirely free from the insoluble impurities which are contained in the ordinary brimstone ores of commerce.

Some diversity of opinion prevails among entomologists and practical orchardists as to the comparative value of the flowers of sulphur and flour sulphur for spraying purposes. From a chemical standpoint, however, both grades are pure, the only difference being that the flowers of sulphur is slightly more acid than the flour. Owing to the fact, however that the yield of the flowers of sulphur is much smaller than the flour sulphur its cost is considerably higher.

G. R. CUSHMAN.

PLEIONE YUNNANENSIS.

This very pretty little orchid, belonging to a group known popularly as Indian crocuses, was first found in Yunnan, in 1895, at from 6,000 to 7,000 feet elevation. Somewhat later, and at a lower elevation, Dr. Henry also found it, but though known to science, the plant was not seen in cultivation until Sutton & Sons, of Reading, received examples from a Chinese correspondent, says the Gardeners' Magazine. These plants in flower were exhibited before the Royal Horticultural Society at the February meeting of the present year, when they excited considerable interest among orchid lovers. Apparently the species is not difficult to cultivate, and as it carries its flowers on a scape six inches high, it differs from most of the species in general cultivation. Each flower is about three inches across and has bright rose-purple sepals and petals, and a large, rounded, fringed lip that is also rosy-purple with dots and small blotches of chocolate-red; the keels are toothed, and very pale purple.

John Macrae will adopt the plan, as soon as mums are out of the way, of using the soil for bulbous stock. The benches when emptied are filled with Easter lilies. Mr. Macrae's seedling mum, Golden Dome, a sport of Yellow Eaton, is promising and highly thought of in the market. It will be distributed jointly next year by the E. G. Hill Co. and the introducer.

F. Macrae's Sons grow carnations as their principal crop and have large cuts in sight.

TRITOMAS.

Can tritomas be kept safely through the winter in a moderately moist cellar with an average temperature of 45 to 50 degrees without any covering over the roots, or should they be covered with moist sand? J. L. D.

Yes, the condition described will suit tritomas first rate through the winter. Even if it were a little lower in temperature it would not hurt, only cover the roots as high as the earth came when they were growing outdoors. The tritoma is almost a hardy plant in our northern states. W. S.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

While the last week was a busy one for the store men making preparations for Christmas, the cut flower business was quiet and stock of all kinds was scarce, as not much of anything was coming in at our commission houses.

Christmas trade was fully up to previous years. It is reported that the leading retailers booked more advance orders for plants and cut flowers than in any other year. Plant sales are reported large, both of blooming and other plants. Everything sold well in the plant line. Taking it altogether, the store men seem well pleased with their Christmas business.

Great quantities of ground pine, holly and laurel have been sold, many being early sold out of green, as this was scarce. Holly went begging at $2 per case and all of poor quality.

In cut stock, everything was scarce, as we had little sunshine this month. Prices on all kinds of stock were away up. There was a decided scarcity in roses, carnations and violets. The fancy grades in carnations brought up to $8 per hundred, with nothing under $4. Violets were up to $2 per hundred for fancy Californias.

The top price for choice roses was $15 to $20, with only a few in the market and only about half the orders filled. Romans, Paper Whites and valley were in good supply at hardly any advance in price.

Various Notes.

Frank Weber returned from Kansas City December 22, where he attended a meeting of nurserymen.

H. Stocke has taken the place vacated by H. H. Rieman with the Michel Plant & Bulb Co.

Fred C. Weber has had one of the prettiest windows of any of the west end florists; all red and very attractive.

Will Adles has left the employ of Mrs. M. M. Ayers.

C. Young & Sons Co. will again have the decorations for the big Imperial ball at the St. Louis Club hall. This event is one of the largest of the season with the society folks.

Among the uptown florists who have had pretty window decorations are the Ellison Floral Co., Kalisch & Son, Eggeling Floral Co. and F. H. Weber.

Riessen Floral Co., on South Broadway, is always in line with attractive window decorations. At this place all hands are busy.

The officers of the St. Louis Florists' Club will hold a meeting some time this week to talk over show matters and to arrange to complete the $10,000 guarantee fund not later than the February meeting.

NEW ORLEANS.

At the last meeting of the New Orleans Horticulture Society little business was transacted, almost all the time being given to Prof. Wilmon Newel, of the State Experiment Station at Baton Rouge, who delivered an interesting lecture on "Insects Which Damage and Destroy Our Field Products in Louisiana." His flashlight introduction, demonstrating the modus operandi of these pests, was highly appreciated by the audience and different remedies to annihilate them were also given by the speaker.

Prof. Arthur H. Rosenfeld, of Radford, Va., read a paper on "The White Fly," a great enemy of the citrus plants of Louisiana.

C. W. Eichling recommended as a very satisfactory insecticide, after having tried many different ones, an oil, which is sold by the American Horticultural Distributing Co., of Martinsburg, W. Va.

E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind., was in town last week, coming to see New Orleans for the first time. M. M. L.

White Plains, N. Y.—J. H. Lauren & Co. intend to erect this winter three new iron-frame greenhouses of about 10,000 feet of glass at the corner of Central avenue and Tarrytown road. They expect to grow roses and carnations and general bedding stuff for the local trade. They will also ship to Philadelphia and New York city markets.

Washington, Pa.—Jos. H. Seaman & Co. got out a pretty little Christmas card, with a sprig of holly and gold-leaf bells stamped in one corner. It was used with all boxes sent out for Christmas, being tied on with narrow red and green ribbon. They also had a souvenir folder decorated with a wreath of holly enclosing an appropriate Christmas thought in verse.

SURPLUS STOCK IN EXCELLENT CONDITION

New Year's, the time of balls and parties, is now on the program. What will you use to decorate the tables and homes of your customers with? Take my advice and use an Araucaria Compacta Robusta or Glauca. With the size and kind I grow, you will be surprised the effect it will have on the table. The plant is a perfect marvel of Nature, a wonder of Nature; the brush of an artist cannot paint it any better. Price—6 to 7-in. pots, 4 to 6 years old. 4 to 6 tiers, 25 to 30 inches high and wide, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00 to $2.50 each. Specimen Glauca, 5 years old, 7-in. pots, 6 to 7 tiers, 30 to 35 inches high and wide, $2.00, $2.50 to $3.00 each; 6-in. pots, 3 to 5 tiers, 3 years old, 15 to 25 inches high, $1.00 to $1.25 each.
Araucaria Excelsa 6-in. pots, 5 to 7 tiers, 4 years old, 25 to 30 inches high, $1.00 to $1.50 each.

are not scarce with us. We can meet all wants.
Kentia Forsteriana, 7-in. pots, made-up, one large size plant about 45 to 48 inches high in the center and three smaller sizes, 25 to 30 inches high around it, which gives them a good appearance, $2.00 to $2.50 each; 6-in. pots, single plants, 36 to 45 inches high, 5 to 6 good leaves, 4 years old, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 each; 6-in pots, 32 to 36 inches high, 5 to 6 good leaves, 4 years old, $1.00 each; 5½ to 6-in. pots, 4 years old, 30 inches high, 5 good leaves, 75c each.

Dracaena Bruanti (imported), 30 inches high, 6-inch pots, 50c; $5.00 per dozen. Full of golden waxy foliage from top to bottom, the best Dracaena known for house decoration; stands any amount of heat and dust; a great favorite all over Europe; easy to keep.

FERNS, all raised in pots and not on benches as follow:

Nephrolepis Barrowsii, 7-in. pots as big as a bushel basket, 75c to $1.00 each; 6-in. pots, large, ready for 7-in., 50c; 5½-in., 40c; 5-in., 35c; 4-in., 25c.

Boston Ferns, 7-in., very bushy, only 75c; 6-in., 50c or $5.00 per dozen; 5-in., 30c to 35c; 4-in., 20c.

Maiden-hair Ferns, 6-in., 35c to 40c.

Pronouncing Dictionary.

A list of plant names and the botanical terms most frequently met with in articles on trade topics, with the correct pronunciation for each. 35 cents

Plant Breeding.

By L. H. BAILEY. The treatment is both scientific and practical, and will enable gardeners and horticulturists to experiment intelligently in cross-breeding. The subject is fully and clearly elaborated. Cloth. $1.00

The Dahlia.

By LAWRENCE K. PEACOCK. A practical treatise on the habits, characteristics, cultivation and history of the dahlia with a descriptive list of all the best varieties. Copiously and elegantly illustrated. 30 cents

The Florists' Manual.

By WILLIAM SCOTT. Covers the whole field of commercial floriculture. Articles are arranged alphabetically so that reference is quick and easy. It tells you just what you want to know in just the way you want to be told. $5.00

Smith's Chrysanthemum Manual.

By ELMER D. SMITH. Revised edition. A complete practical treatise, concise directions for every stage of the work of propagator and grower. The result of 22 years' experience. Fully illustrated. 40 cents

Handbook of Practical Landscape Gardening.

By F. R. ELLIOTT. Designed for city and suburban residences and country schoolhouses, containing designs for lots and grounds, from a lot 30x100 feet to a 40-acre plant. Cloth. $1.50

Cabbage, Cauliflower and Allied Vegetables.

By C. L. ALLEN. An explanation of the requirements, conditions, cultivation and general management pertaining to the entire cabbage group. The chapter on seed raising is probably the most authorative treatise on this subject ever published. Insects and fungi are given due attention. Illustrated. 128 pages. Cloth. 50 cents

The Nursery Book.

By L. H. BAILEY. A complete guide to the multiplication of plants. The book comprises full practical directions for sowing, the making of all kinds of layers, stools, cuttings, propagation by bulbs and tubers, and very complete accounts of all the leading kinds of budding, grafting and inarching. An alphabetical catalog of about 1500 plants—of fruit, kitchen-garden, ornamental and greenhouse species—with directions for their multiplication. Cloth. $1.25

Handbook of Plants and General Horticulture.

By PETER HENDERSON. This new edition comprises about 50 per cent more genera than the former one, and embraces the botanical name, derivation, natural order, etc., together with a short history of the different genera, concise instructions for their propagation and culture, and all the leading local or common English names, together with a comprehensive glossary of botanical and technical terms. Plain instructions are also given for the cultivation of the principal vegetables, fruits and flowers. Cloth. $4.00

RADIATION.

Will you inform me as to how many feet of radiation a 1-inch, 1¼-inch, 1½-inch, 2-inch, 2½-inch, 3-inch, 3½-inch and 4-inch pipe ought to supply, using hot water? F. M. L.

Pipes less than 1½-inch are seldom used as flow pipes or risers. The following table will show the amount of radiation a given size pipe will supply:

1½-inch pipe,	225	square feet radiation.
2 -inch pipe,	400	square feet radiation.
2½-inch pipe,	620	square feet radiation.
3 -inch pipe,	900	square feet radiation.
3½-inch pipe,	1,220	square feet radiation.
4 -inch pipe,	1,660	square feet radiation.

CONVERTIBLE SYSTEM.

I have heard of changing from hot water to steam by simply taking out a part of the piping. Is it practicable to heat by steam through 2-inch pipes? My flows are 2-inch and 2½-inch and return 2-inch. The longest run, from the boiler through the house and back to the boiler, is 250 feet. F. W. F.

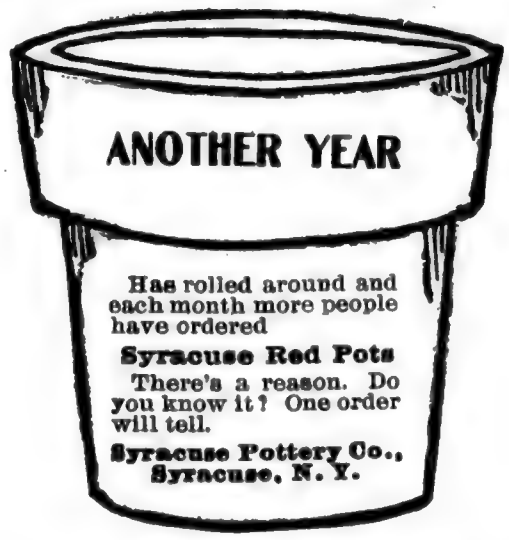
Yes, it is perfectly practicable to change from hot water to steam by reducing the amount of piping; in fact, many greenhouse plants are now being constructed on a convertible basis; i. e., so as to use hot water during spring and fall, while a mild heat is required, and then, when severe weather sets in, to draw off the water, close the valve to the expansion tank and run the plant on a steam basis. Two-inch pipe is not the ideal for this plan, however, although it is a satisfactory size for hot water and can be used for steam. If you have sufficient radiation for mild weather and can work the plant on a convertible basis, place a few gate valves in the system, so as to cut out enough radiation to allow working it on a steam basis. It would be well to have the present radiation figured up and the changes necessary accurately determined before removing any piping. L. C. C.

HOT WATER OR STEAM.

I wish to know which will be the cheaper, to heat with soft coal and hot water or with hard coal and steam. Which will bring the best results in a rose house? Can you give the names of two of the best boilers, one for hot water and one for steam? M. E. A.

It is impossible to decide your question without full information in regard to local conditions. I know you are in a soft-coal region and that soft coal or coke are available. The size of the plant to be heated, as well as the character of the crops grown are important considerations to be taken account of in making a choice between hot water and steam. As a general proposition, however, water is more satisfactory for small plants, say two or three houses 100 feet long, while steam is cheaper to install and more satisfactory for extensive plants. Hot water with hard coal costs less to manage, while steam with soft coal is dearer as regards time of fireman, but more satisfactory for extensive plants. There are many good greenhouse boilers on the market, both steel and cast iron. Get the one with greatest surface for the heated gases to come in contact with. L. C. C.

PIPE FOR HEATING.



My new east and west house is 20x31. The side walls are four feet high and nine feet to the ridge. It has two feet of glass on the south side, both sides being exposed and both ends protected. The outside temperature sometimes drops to 25 degrees below zero. I wish to maintain a temperature of 58 to 60 degrees. What size pipe should I use and how arrange for hot water?

I also have one house 20x24, nine feet to the ridge, walls four feet, built on the west end of the first house. It has glass in the south side and west end. I want to maintain a temperature of 45 to 48 degrees. The boiler pit is just north of the 24-foot house and eight feet deep. How high should the expansion tank be? A. D. S.

Two-inch pipe will provide a satisfactory system for heating with hot water..

See advertisement in last week's Review and watch for it next week,

THE HERENDEEN MFG. CO., Geneva, N. Y.

The house 20x31 should be provided with thirteen runs of 2-inch pipe the length of the house. This can be divided into two or three coils, each supplied by one 2-inch pipe. If three coils are used three of the thirteen pipes will be flow pipes, or if two coils are used two of the thirteen pipes will be flow pipes. If the house has three benches with the piping under them, three coils will be most satisfactory. Use five pipes on the north side, four on the south and four under the center bench, making each coil independent of the others, except that they can all be taken off a common flow near the boiler and all empty into a common return. The house 20x24 should have eleven 2-inch pipes, arranged either on the side walls or under the benches as above described.

Elevate the expansion tank just as much as possible; fifteen feet above the highest point in the system is good.

DETROIT.

The Market.

It is rather too early to be able to go into details about the Christmas trade, but we can say that it certainly was good with everyone.

Roses were exceedingly scarce. What there were on the market brought good prices for this city, about $15 per hundred for the best. Carnations arrived in larger quantities at the last moment than was at first expected, but still not enough to meet the demand. The stock was good and ranged in price from $5 to $8 per hundred. Poinsettias went well at from $3 to $3.50 per dozen, wholesale. The grade of these beautiful flowers varies much. Some are grown right and keep remarkably well, while others look like a dishrag on a busy day.

Many eastern violets are handled in Detroit, as well as many singles and some few doubles grown in this vicinity. The price for Christmas was $2.50 per hundred for either variety. Valley is proving a good substitute for violets, and many thousands were sold. The price was $4 to $5 per hundred. Many orchids were also sold. Narcissi, daffodils, Romans, sweet peas and a few stray mums completed the stock. Smilax is plentiful.

Club Meeting.

The last meeting of the club was well attended considering the busy times. The paper by Robert Flowerday having been postponed until January, there was little done. Philip Breitmeyer held the floor for some time, giving a talk on Christmas preparations. He spoke mainly of the importance of keeping up prices.

January 2 will be "Christmas trade discussion."

Various Notes.

George Leadley, formerly at 245 Woodward avenue, is defendant in a suit started by Louis Knauss to have a property trade declared void. Mr. Knauss says he exchanged a flat at Jefferson avenue and Riopelle street with Leadley for the latter's business, but now wants his property back. He declares that the books were "fixed" to show net profits in 1905 of about $7,000 and charges that he was imposed upon. The business, he contends, is not now on a paying basis. Judge Hosmer has issued a temporary restraining order preventing Leadley from encumbering or disposing of the property. Mr. Knauss is a well-liked and respected German fellow citizen. When he bought Leadley out he placed his daughter, Mrs. C. P. Cox, in charge of the store.

P. F. Reuss, better known as Pete, of Johannesburg, came down to help at Schroeter's. H. S.

The Test of WORKMANSHIP

NO greenhouse is a perfect house unless all the materials which enter into its construction are properly made by experienced workmen. All of our material is made by men who know that perfect material is needed to make a perfect house and you can't grow the best stock without a perfect house. Well made material costs less than the inferior kind—less repairing to be done.

Our workmanship will stand the most critical test—how about making a comparison with the houses you have? Write for catalogue.

DETROIT.

The Market.

It is rather too early to be able to go into details about the Christmas trade, but we can say that it certainly was good with everyone.

Roses were exceedingly scarce. What there were on the market brought good prices for this city, about $15 per hundred for the best. Carnations arrived in larger quantities at the last moment than was at first expected, but still not enough to meet the demand. The stock was good and ranged in price from $5 to $8 per hundred. Poinsettias went well at from $3 to $3.50 per dozen, wholesale. The grade of these beautiful flowers varies much. Some are grown right and keep remarkably well, while others look like a dishrag on a busy day.

Many eastern violets are handled in Detroit, as well as many singles and some few doubles grown in this vicinity. The price for Christmas was $2.50 per hundred for either variety. Valley is proving a good substitute for violets, and many thousands were sold. The price was $4 to $5 per hundred. Many orchids were also sold. Narcissi, daffodils, Romans, sweet peas and a few stray mums completed the stock. Smilax is plentiful.

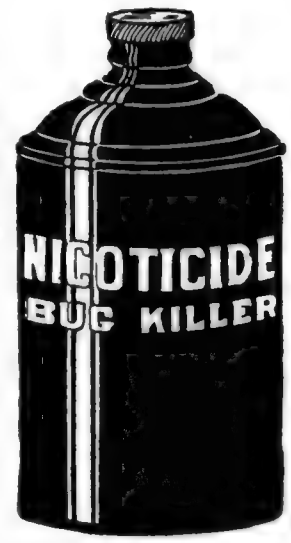
Club Meeting.

The last meeting of the club was well attended considering the busy times. The paper by Robert Flowerday having been postponed until January, there was little done. Philip Breitmeyer held the floor for some time, giving a talk on Christmas preparations. He spoke mainly of the importance of keeping up prices.

January 2 will be "Christmas trade discussion."

Various Notes.

George Leadley, formerly at 245 Woodward avenue, is defendant in a suit started by Louis Knauss to have a property trade declared void. Mr. Knauss says he exchanged a flat at Jefferson avenue and Riopelle street with Leadley for the latter's business, but now wants his property back. He declares that the books were "fixed" to show net profits in 1905 of about $7,000 and charges that he was imposed upon. The business, he contends, is not now on a paying basis. Judge Hosmer has issued a temporary restraining order preventing Leadley from encumbering or disposing of the property. Mr. Knauss is a well-liked and respected German fellow citizen. When he bought Leadley out he placed his daughter, Mrs. C. P. Cox, in charge of the store.



P. F. Reuss, better known as Pete, of Johannesburg, came down to help at Schroeter's. H. S.

The Florists' Manual

We note your advertisement in a recent number of the REVIEW of the second edition of Scott's Florists' Manual, and request that you enter our order for a copy of this valuable book. The writer is thoroughly acquainted with the first edition of this work, having often had occasion to use it for reference while a student at the Michigan Agricultural College. Please rush this order, for we feel, with Mark Twain, that we "would rather not use violence."

The Test of WORKMANSHIP

NO greenhouse is a perfect house unless all the materials which enter into its construction are properly made by experienced workmen. All of our material is made by men who know that perfect material is needed to make a perfect house and you can't grow the best stock without a perfect house. Well made material costs less than the inferior kind—less repairing to be done.

Our workmanship will stand the most critical test—how about making a comparison with the houses you have? Write for catalogue.

But there are three more things we want you to surely see.

First: The extreme lightness—"just like being outdoors."

Second: That the sashbars extend only to the ventilating header—think of the reduction in shade at that point alone.

Third: That's our self-oiling ventilating gear—but we don't make it that way now—the new model completely encloses the gear—the operating rod comes down inside the pipe support.

Three strong points that you can't argue against—three points that the best local house made, can't meet.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Just a word about some left-over stock of which you will need a few plants later on. Save half a dozen old plants of sweet stevia. Cut them down to within six inches of the pot and stand in some cool corner. In March you will get more cuttings from them than you need.

The stools of poinsettias that have been cut, or spoiled at some decoration, place under a dry, warm bench, where not a drop of water will reach them, or a warm part of the potting shed will do as well, so long as they are kept perfectly dry. Keep them in this dry state until the first part of May. There is plenty of time to propagate after that, for next winter's crop.

Unsold plants of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine in 5-inch or 6-inch pots should be kept in a cool house, about 50 degrees at night, and slowly dried off. In May the old bulb will send up young growths which will make fine cuttings, or if the old growth is pinched off and the old soil is shaken off the bulb, they will, with care, make the largest specimen plants.

Of all unsold Christmas plants the azalea is most worth taking care of. Old, wilted flowers and seedpods should be faithfully picked off, and if the plants are started to grow they should be kept in a house where it is 60 degrees at night and daily sprayed to encourage the young growth. If any of these young, vigorous growths are taking the lead strongly over others, you can pinch them. There is plenty of time for them to branch and make several heads of bloom in place of one.

Stock for Forcing.

On some fine day bring in a good supply of Von Sion and Golden Spur narcissi. As mentioned several weeks ago, you can bring in three or four weeks' supply of these narcissi. They will receive no harm beneath a cool bench.

You can with safety now bring in a few plants of lilac. They will flower freely if given a night temperature of 60 degrees and sprayed several times a day. Marie Legraye is the easiest for early forcing.

Hybrid Perpetual Roses.

You all realize that Easter is very early this year. The later Easter arrives, the nearer we approach the natural time of blooming of our early-flowered hardy shrubs, H. P. and Rambler roses, and the less time will it take under glass to force them into flower. When, as this year, this most important floral date is early, then more time must be allowed. Therefore, I advise you to bring in your hybrid perpetual roses at once. These have been covered, root and branch, with four inches of soil and protected further with five or six inches of stable litter. We find no frost has penetrated to the roots and the wood of the stems is as plump and green as when dug. Bring them in and stand in a cool house. As there is no possibility of root action, there need be no hurry about pruning the tops. The roots and tops will start together and you will be better able to tell in a week where to cut off the canes. If too much stem is left, the lower eyes will not break at all. The sap will run to the top of the stem and your roses will have a leggy and naked appearance. If cut too low you may leave only eyes that are what we call blind; eyes that will make a vigorous growth but no flower. So if you wait a week or ten days before cutting down the canes you will be better able to see just where to prune.

The Rambler Roses.

The Ramblers are entirely different. There is little if any pruning to be done on them. If plentifully supplied with strong canes, you can cut away the wood that flowered last spring, also the unripened tips of the shoots, and that is all the pruning that is required by the Ramblers. If grown in pots last summer and you intend to give them a mulch of cow manure, delay this for two weeks, or until they are breaking their buds because the roots are as yet inactive and the plants would not be benefited by the manure.

Before the eye breaks into leaf the plants should be tied; if the canes are five or six feet long they are sure to need it. Bending the long canes spirally around three or four stout stakes is a favorite method of tying the Ramblers, but not the only way. You can trim in a fan shape, or any way your fancy may suggest. This bending the canes is not only best done before the eyes break but it induces an even break all the way up the cane. If left upright the sap would ascend to the top of the growth and a feeble growth at the base of the plant would be the result.

The Baby Rambler will be largely grown for spring sales. If you have to buy dormant plants from your nurseryman, which should be done as soon as possible if wanted to flower at Easter, pot at once and place in cool houses until some root action takes place. Gradually increase the temperature. All the pruning they will need is to shorten back the extra strong growths of last summer and cut out old wood that flowered last spring.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

OUR CREDIT SYSTEM ITS USES AND ABUSES

A Tribute to the Craft.

I deem it an honor as well as a privilege to address you upon a subject that, it seems to me, has never received the consideration it merits, either at the hands of our numerous florists' clubs or of our national society.

At the very outset, however, and before I approach the subject proper, namely, "Our Credit System; Its Uses and Abuses," I wish to premise my remarks by paying a brief tribute to the members of our craft, scattered throughout this great American continent.

It is no exaggeration to assert that there is no body of men more honorable, more honest and straightforward, than our brother florists.

It is a noteworthy fact, one scarcely requiring any proof, that during the panic of 1893, when business conditions were most deplorable, when the stringency of the money market and the general stagnation and business depression were most appalling in their consequences, when the professional calamity howlers and the unscrupulous demagogues aired their theories to their hearts' content, thereby adding fresh oil to the already kindled fire of fear and discontent, when the so called "first laws" of self-preservation began to assert themselves in a manner that brought disaster and financial ruin to many a business house; our brother florists, as a body, be it said to their everlasting glory and credit, put their shoulders to the wheel that much the harder, never thinking of joining the procession of bankrupts. It is an actual fact—and I challenge anybody to disprove it—that there were less failures, in proportion, among the florists, either compulsory or otherwise, than among any other body of business men. I could easily name a number of florists, who, during those memorable dark days, saw fit to deprive themselves and their families of things generally considered as absolute necessities, in order to meet their obligations.

Men capable of such self-sacrifice, men possessed of such moral stamina, of such business integrity and honesty of purpose need not hesitate to inscribe their names upon the roll of honor. Perhaps Pope had some gardener in view when he said that "an honest man is the noblest work of God." Of course there are exceptions, but of these later. That much for our honesty and business integrity.

Our Credit System.

Can we claim as much for our business methods, or, to be more exact, for our credit system, as compared with that of other progressive business men? Hardly. While it is true that we are keeping pace with the times in many other respects, while we are advancing steadily and uninterruptedly along lines of general progress, increasing our facilities, modernizing our stores and our greenhouses, improving our products, while we have been exchanging views and opinions as to the best methods of marketing our products, going even so far as to touch upon the ideal employer and employee; it has never occurred to us to consider seriously the means and ways and the best methods of modernizing our credit system. A question of momentous importance to our own interests, strange to say, seems to have escaped our attention. Viewed from whatever standpoint and whatever arguments we may bring to bear upon the subject, it is undeniably true that our credit system is in its primitive state, lacking those sound, fundamental business principles which are at the basis of every sound financial or industrial institution.

The Poinsettia in this Style is One of the Best Sellers.

A Fundamental of Success.

It is said of the late Marshall Field, the merchant prince of two generations, that his first step, at the very outset of his brilliant business career, was to establish a sound credit system. A rule from which he never deviated and which, perhaps more than any other factor, was responsible for and contributed so largely towards his colossal fortune, was to collect his outstanding accounts and to meet his own obligations upon maturity.

What is true of Marshall Field, the merchant prince, holds equally true of John Smith, once upon a time the struggling market gardener, whom we now see making rapid strides along the highway of progress. The reason? Easily explained: "I pay as I go," says Mr. Smith, "and in order to be able to do this, I collect my own accounts promptly."

Simple enough in itself, yet a rule of this sort seems to constitute the cornerstone, the very foundation of one's success.

Necessity of Credit.

"To pay as one goes" does not imply, however, spot cash transactions. Such a modus operandi is no longer tenable under our present business conditions. Nor is credit as such to be despised or condemned on general principles. On the contrary, credit, well regulated and judiciously used, is a blessing and a privilege that can scarcely be overestimated. Were it not for this privilege, I venture to say, there are many among us today who would never have achieved the success they enjoy.

How often do we hear of the man, who in years gone by had made his first start in life by building his first little greenhouse on a paltry few dollars, borrowed from either friend or shark, stocking it with a few geraniums and other truck, obtained on credit from some reputable establishment or other?

If we trace the history of the successful florist of today, we can see at a glance that credit has in a large measure contributed towards his success. I say "in a large measure" advisedly, because other qualifications, such as hard work, perseverance, will-power and energy, were of equal importance as a means to his successful business career.

I reiterate, credit is a privilege that is not to be despised by any business man, no matter how conservative in his enterprise or how determined to steer clear of debt.

Credit Inspired by Confidence.

Broadly speaking, it is credit, inspired by confidence and backed by enterprise, that is responsible for the remarkable development of our natural resources—the wonder of the world. It is credit inspired by confidence, that is accountable for the prosperity which we enjoy today. Credit has been the means of launching many a successful industry, giving employment to hundreds and thousands of men. Credit has been the means of enabling many an individual to stem the tide of adversity and to rise to affluence and wealth. The struggling market gardener of a few years ago would have never, perhaps, become the successful grower of today if it were not for that blessed privilege—credit. I will go further and say that credit has been the means whereby most of our modern, mammoth greenhouse establishments have come into existence.

Credit, coupled with hard work, energy and business integrity, has made it possible for the enterprising man of today to achieve his success in much less time than it took the florist of a generation ago, by the slow "pay as you go" process in its literal sense. We are progressing, so to speak, in a geometrical ratio, by leaps and bounds, as it were, no longer satisfied to let well enough alone, no longer content, like the immortal Micawber, to wait until something turns up. We must create our own opportunities and we are doing it to our heart's content, thanks to that blessed privilege—credit.

If there is anything to be turned up we are generally inclined to take a hand in the turning process ourselves. We seem to realize that faint heart never won success; hence, fear and hesitation no longer keep us in check. If we are determined to "get there" it is seldom, indeed, that we fail in our object. But all good things have their limitations and what is beneficial or wholesome in some cases often produces the contrary effect in others.

The Abuse of Credit.

Assuming that credit, well regulated and judiciously used, is a privilege that the strictly honorable and enterprising business man cannot fail to make the most of, it becomes an absolute menace, often to a whole business community, when placed at the disposal of the unscrupulous trickster. To illustrate my idea: I know of a florist in the west, doing a thriving business, who seems to take especial delight in defrauding his creditors. He buys everything in or out of sight, in Holland, Belgium or New Jersey, throwing his goods on the market at prices, compared with which, those of his legitimate competitors seem prohibitory.

Here is a case of credit misapplied, the result proving detrimental not only to the man sustaining a direct loss, but to the florists in the immediate vicinity, as well.

I will cite another case. There is a florist in one of the middle states, who makes it a practice to order every new seedling carnation in sight. Unlike the careful, ultraconservative grower who pays his bills and who, as a matter of course, wants to know something about the variety offered, the man I speak of, orders indiscriminately on the principle of "something to gain and nothing to lose," never paying for the stock.

The season following, he offers rooted cuttings at a reduced price, underselling the very man he victimized, thus doing him a double injury. And yet, despite such instances, and I could cite many others, and despite the fact that tricksters, under the assumed name of florists, are encroaching upon the legitimate trade in a manner most injurious to our common interests; in our anxiety to outdo our competitors, to swell our volume of business we are inclined to take chances; we fail to discriminate, to draw the line most rigorously, as it needs to be drawn, between those worthy of our confidence and those who should be blacklisted in letters so large and conspicuous, that he who runs may read.

And right here I wish to be understood, that I am in no wise reflecting upon the honor of those, who through no fault of their own, but owing to adverse business conditions or unforeseen circumstances, were compelled to liquidate their affairs as best they could; in other words, to fail in their business. Such men deserve our sincere sympathy and it behooves us as men, and as members of a noble craft, to do all within our power to aid them.

Run the Rascals Out.

It is the scamp, not the unfortunate victim of circumstances, the man (God save the name) who lays his trap for the unsuspecting Hollander, who scans the trade papers and picks his victims to suit his own nefarious designs; it is a fellow of this sort, I say, that deserves our unqualified censure and our utmost condemnation.

Aside from the moral element involved, and, aside from the fact that scoundrelism should be discouraged on general principles, we must view the situation from the standpoint of self-interest, of self-protection. It is a duty which we owe to ourselves, to our fellow-members, to the community at large, to turn the rascals down and out. It is high time, indeed, that we realize the situation as it affects our common interests. Often the misdeeds of one miscreant will reflect upon the honor of the innocent. It is but human nature to profit by experience. If John has victimized us, it is not likely that we will place our implicit trust and confidence in Tom, notwithstanding the fact that the latter means us no harm.

It is in instances of this sort where credit not only ceases to be a blessing and a privilege, but it becomes an absolute curse; and the sooner we realize it and the sooner we devise some means and ways whereby to put an end to such abominable practices, the better for all concerned. Our trade papers can and should help us to accomplish this worthy object, for there is no means more effective, there is no weapon more powerful than the press. Under the glare of its far-reaching searchlight, human rats invariably go under cover. If credit is a privilege, that privilege must not be abused.

Fortunately, however, such men, the black sheep in our fold, are but in the minority and need not be considered in connection with our credit system, as practiced by the rank and file, the men whose honesty and honorable intentions are beyond reproach, who meet their obligations in the long run.

An Anniversary Basket of Plants.

Obligations of Debtors.

A few weeks ago I happened to meet a fellow-traveler, representing a western crockery concern, who, in the course of our conversation, said to me, "The florists are awfully slow pay. While other business men will either pay upon maturity, or else will write to the house and ask for an extension of time, the florists, as a rule, do neither; statements, letters and drafts seem to have no effect upon them. Eventually, of course, they pay, but they do so to suit their own convenience, regardless of conditions or terms."

I need hardly add that there is a deal of truth in these remarks and that the man knew whereof he spoke. As a matter of fact, and I say it without any fear or reservation, in the majority of cases, terms are honored more in the breach than in the observance.

To be sure, the average florist means well, he means to pay his bills—some time. He has good intentions; but, and here comes the rub, good intentions never were and never will be a negotiable asset. Good intentions can never pay an account. A book full of "good intentions" is no more effective and can no more sustain the stability of a business house, than a prayer of Dowie, for example, can stay the ravages of an incurable disease. Like prayer, good intentions are good enough in their place, but in this matter-of-fact world, unless backed by something tangible, something negotiable, good intentions are of no particular consequence.

It seems to me, and I say it without any fear or reservation, that some of the best men in our business have but a mistaken idea as to the duties and obligations they owe to a business house. Just because they see fit to patronize a business house it does not necessarily follow that they have the right to ignore the business terms, as laid down by that house.

I do not mean to convey the idea that I am an advocate of ironclad rules, that none but strict conditions should govern all business transactions transpiring between buyer and seller. On the contrary, I believe in liberal business methods. I believe in liberal business terms. I hold that any man, worthy of credit, is entitled to all due consideration and liberal treatment, but I likewise believe that privileges of this sort should not be abused.

Resolutions of Credit Men.

Assuming, for the sake of argument, that such a thing as a committee of credit men, appointed by, and acting under the direct supervision of the Society of American Florists were possible; assuming furthermore, that such a committee had the power to act, to pass judgment and to lay down rules and regulations in all matters pertaining to our business or credit system; would it not appeal to each and every one of us, if this committee saw fit to pass a resolution—something of the following order?

First. Resolved, that no business house is worthy of patronage unless it manifests a liberal spirit towards its patrons.

Second. Resolved, that no business house need or dare expect the good will of any florist in good standing, unless it shows consideration for and a good will of its own towards its patrons.

Third. Resolved, that no florist is entitled to credit and to all advantages accruing therefrom, unless he realizes the need of paying heed to statements, of answering business letters and of honoring drafts.

Fourth. Resolved, that any florist of good standing reserves the right to exact the most liberal terms possible, but, when once agreed upon, such terms are to be honored, not in the breach, but in the observance, and Fifth. Be it further resolved, that if any florist finds himself in strained circumstances and is not able to meet his obligations in due time, such florist is obliged to write and explain matters to his creditors, said creditors to make all due allowances and to show all due consideration as the case might warrant.

The Florist and the "Four Hundred."

One of our greatest shortcomings in the regulation of our credit system, it seems to me, lies in the fact of our very loose methods in dealing with the "four hundreds" of our towns. It is a matter of record that society folks, while in nowise backward in following the dictates of fashion, are decidedly so in paying their flower bills.

It is not unusual to hear that, Mr. So-and-So, a prominent man about town, occupying a magnificent mansion, driving fast horses, or a $5,000 automobile, has not paid his flower bill since "June, a year ago."

Nor is it out of the ordinary to learn that Mme. Blanc, who gave Mr. Florist a carte blanche order some ten months ago, has left for the seashore, the mountains, or for Europe without giving her flower bill the least thought. "Of course," Mr. Florist tells us, "the money is good, and it won't do at all to send a second bill, much less to press for a settlement." Mr. So-and-So or Madame Blanc might feel offended. No, it won't do at all!

Then, there is another reason to be considered. There is a competitor around the corner who is just looking for the chance of carrying such accounts on his books for one or two years.

A Serious Question.

That our credit system is defective, antiquated and out of accord with our present business conditions is self-evident and need not be dwelt upon at greater length here. Nor is it my object to suggest any new methods to you or to point out the remedy. I submit this question to your own good judgment and sincerely hope that you may give it your earnest and serious consideration. It is a question that concerns us all alike, the wholesaler as well as the retailer, the man who has already made his start in life as well as the young man who bends all his energies and all his ingenuity towards that end.

Philadelphia, the horticultural center of the United States, a city whence so many good things have sprung in the past, is preëminently fit to take up the work of reform. And this is a most opportune time to undertake a work of this sort.

Our national society meets here in August. There are many good things in store for us, we may be sure of that. Some may tell us something about the ideal gardener or employer, some about conducting our stores, others about operating our greenhouses with profit. Let us hope that some good soul may tell us how to bring about the much needed reform in our credit system; a subject well worthy of the earnest consideration of the best men in our society.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS.

Size Up Your Records.

Again the holiday time, with its hurry and anxieties, its successes or failures, is over and as you settle back to the regular routine work it is well, ere you go to planning for the coming season, to take time to go carefully over your records of cuts, sales, prices received, kinds sold, when the largest crops were on, etc.; in fact, all the different items that, taken together, go to make the complete record by which you can judge of your success or failure, and where you can improve in your methods, where you have made failures or partial successes. Do you find that your records are not complete enough, lacking in one or more things that you would like to know? Then make a New Year's resolve to rectify this and commence at once to keep a record of every item, so that you will have it at your next review, a year hence.

You see that it is none too early to make this general review of facts, for before you hardly realize it, it will be time to be starting your new stock for next season, and unless you have looked these matters over thoroughly, you will not know which is your most profitable variety, or where your best stock is, or what kind sells best, grows best, etc.

Violets in Pots.

Besides having your regular house or houses full for cutting, did you have some nice plants in pots, well established and in full bloom, for the holiday trade? I do not know what your experience may have been, but we have never found anything better than the Lady Hume Campbell for this work, as it stands a higher temperature, makes a larger clump, holds its flowers better above the foliage, retains them longer, and really has only one objectionable point that I know of, and that is its lighter color; it is not very light if well grown. If you have not tried them as pot plants be sure and put that down, for one of the things, that you are going to try for next season, but do not rely on my say so entirely; give all kinds a trial and find out for yourself which variety you are most successful with and find the best sale for, although this latter is a thing that depends greatly on the plants' appearance, for nearly any nice plant, full of bloom, will sell readily if offered at a reasonable price.

Now, to go back, while you are considering what and how many violets you will grow for next season, be getting your soil ready for the flats for the cuttings, so that when you have come to your decision you may begin to take cuttings at once, as this is the best time, up to the middle of March.

APHIS ON VIOLETS.

I have a house of single violets on which the young leaves are curling up. Can you tell me where the trouble is? If I am to use hydrocyanic acid gas please give me the amount for the size of house. A. E. D.

This inquiry is very indefinite, but it looks as if the black aphis were at work. If A. E. D. will examine closely he will have no trouble in ascertaining if this is the case, as he will readily find them by unrolling the leaves and also by inspecting the crown. Of course hydrocyanic acid gas is the best remedy, but the formula has been so often given that it hardly seems necessary to repeat it here. Consult your Florists' Manual if you have not the back numbers of the REVIEW.

White Poinsettias.

Referring to your correspondents' statement, December 13, that none of the poinsettias is white, I wish to say that there is a poinsettia, creamy white, otherwise exactly like the red one. Mr. Thomas, now established for himself in New Orleans, had, some eighteen years ago, a house full of them at a private place on St. Charles avenue, New Orleans. There are also a few plants grown here (Shorb, California), but they are not half so desirable and effective as the red, or the scarlet, double variety. There is hardly a plant that surpasses these in beauty, except perhaps, Eucalyptus ficifolia, which is with us, all the year around, in bloom.

We have a tree thirty feet high which is today, December 25, covered with red flowers that can be seen for some distance. A. ROEDDER.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

CHRISTMAS PLANTS.

The Christmas trade has served to bring out again, and perhaps more clearly than ever, that flowering plants have assumed an impregnable position, even if they have not taken the leading place in holiday sales. From all parts of the country the report is that more plants were offered than ever before and that the buyers in a large proportion of cases chose them in preference to cut flowers. One of the principal reasons for the popularity of plants no doubt is their cheapness by comparison with the Christmas prices of cut stock, and another is the fact that the least enduring of our blooming plants will outlast the freshest of cut flowers, but another, and probably the strongest reason for their steady advance in popular favor, is the splendid quality of the plants now offered and the marked improvement in the way in which they are shown in the stores. The most unappreciative could not fail to approve the artistic taste now quite commonly shown in the filling of baskets and hampers, in the harmonious blending or contrasting of colors of flowers, foliage and embellishments. Add to the foregoing the undoubted fact that retailers who must look to wholesale markets for at least a part of the Christmas cut flowers can make a better percentage of profit on plants than on cut flowers, and naturally push them, and you have the whole secret of the wonderful development of the holiday business in flowering plants.

The character of the plants and plant arrangements most salable at Christmas varies with the character of the stores in which they are offered for sale. In the places where 50 cents a dozen is the price above which carnations cease to move freely it is useless to offer Lorraine begonias, but still this was the most popular plant in high-class stores, and some magnificent stock was seen. More and more growers are learning how to handle this plant and the output of finely shaped, profusely flowered plants increases each year. Ardisias were more than usually abundant this year, at moderate wholesale prices, and sold well at retail. It is notable that while many stores had cut poinsettias for which there was no call, few had enough of the pans of low, wide-headed plants. These also were in demand as table centerpieces all through the holiday season and will be still more largely grown next year. The azalea is not so valuable a plant at Christmas as at Easter; in buyers' minds it seems to be associated with the lily as an Easter flower.

Among cheaper plants, those that any one with glass can provide for himself, are cyclamens, solanums, primroses and the like. These all sold well. Mention must not be forgotten of boxwood. This pyramidal, dark green plant is imported at small cost and has become a formidable competitor of the more expensive and better known araucaria. Plants above fifteen or eighteen inches high were not so readily salable as the smaller specimens, although the price was lower considering the ratio at which prices of other plants increase with size. The boxwood is unsalable unless decorated. With a dull, unglazed Pompeian pot nothing more is needed than a bow of holly-red ribbon. Others used the ordinary flower pot and covered it with a red Porto Rican mat tied with ribbon.

In general the embellishment of plants this season was after a saner fashion than in earlier years of the plant vogue. No pot was permitted to be seen on any plant ready for delivery, but the beauty of the specimen was not obscured by fold upon fold of wrapping as was once the misguided idea of good work. The cheaper plants were sent out with a simple pot-cover of crepe paper. As the price of the plant advanced more expensive pot-covers were used and red ribbon was added. In the leading stores the best things were baskets and hampers filled with flowering plants, with enough of the things grown for their foliage, as adiantum, to afford green or colored foliage where needed. These represented a selling price of from $8 to $25, but where a dozen Beauties cost as much afforded good value in the purchaser's eyes.

The illustrations of Christmas plant arrangements in this issue of the Review are from photographs taken last week at the store of Sam Murray, Kansas City, but do not by any means show how far west from New York the vogue for plant arrangements has made its way.

MR. CODDINGTON'S VIEWS.

A Chat on Greenhouse Construction.

How is a man to know things in this world—absolutely know before he invests several thousands of dollars in an idea that may be still in its experimental stages? The grower must be sort of a gambler—willing to take a long chance and put a theory into practice to uphold his personal views.

Section of House 55x400 of L. B. Coddington, Murray Hill, N. J.

Being determined to get at the bottom of the wide house question, I visited L. B. Coddington's range, at Murray Hill, N. J., where, along with five three-quarter-span cypress houses, each 18½x350 feet, he has two 400-footers, iron-frame, one thirty-seven and a half feet wide, and his last one fifty-five feet wide. He looked like the right man to talk wide house to, because he had tried the narrow, the wider and the widest and stood in a position to make comparisons.

Mr. Coddington has always been in the rose business and in addition to this range at Murray Hill, owns another at New Providence, N. J., of 62,000 square feet of glass area. He is one of those wiry, hustling sort of men who dig right into things—believes in spending money to save money—is familiar with the various constructions and houses of any importance all over the country; has tried erecting his own houses and having it done by the builder—he stands in a position to know things, and he does—knows them in a quiet, unassuming way that carries its own convincement. What Mr. Coddington and his wide-awake foreman told me about this last house, erected by Hitchings & Co., I want you to know. I want you to know the thoroughness with which this house was thought out and built, the superiority of the iron-frame construction and the advantages of the wide house.

"In general terms, how do you like your big house?" I asked Mr. Coddington. "Like it in every way," he replied, "and it's a satisfaction to know that such a construction gives us all possible light, that the eave line, with its metal plate and glazing bar bracket, make an indestructible joint of great strength and give a freedom from ice; that because of the framing's absolute rigidity and the care with which expansion and contraction have been taken care of, the glass breakage is practically nothing. This last house of ours has thoroughly convinced me that 400 feet is about the right length for economy in working and freedom from the complicated heating problems of the extremely long ones, which need expensive anchoring of heating pipes and all that sort of thing."

"What is the height of the ridge?"

"Let me see, the sides are six feet, with ridge twenty-two feet. You see that gives us a big volume of air up there that, when once heated, is a protection against sudden changes and preserves a more uniform temperature and humidity."

"What is all this talk about better ventilation?"

"It's absolutely true, the fresh air is more evenly distributed because there's more air for its distribution, and when it does reach the plants, it's thoroughly warmed up and acts like an insulation against chills."

"Yes, there are 50-foot runs of sash operated by one of these easy-running gears, and right here is where one of the economies in working a large house comes in, for your men can shut down the sash in about half the time it takes to run up and down three small houses covering the same space.''

Interior of Wide House of L. B. Coddington, Murray Hill, N. J.

Wide House of L. B. Coddington, Murray Hill, N. J.

''Now, tell me about your benching.''

''Well, the house runs east and west at a perfect level, but with an inside rise of two and a half feet from south to north. Then, the first bench is only sixteen inches in height and each following bench is two inches higher, making the back one thirty-two inches. Taking this in connection with the two and a half feet of floor rise, each bench is about five inches higher than its southerly neighbor. During the shortest day you can stoop to the edge of the bench on the farthest walk and always see the sun. Then, you understand, the highest bench is perfectly easy to work without any elevation of the walk or the mighty unhandy way of straddling from bench to bench in making your cuts.''

''Let's see, how many benches are there?''

''Nine, three feet eleven inches wide, with ten walks each twenty-two inches wide. Four plants to a bench are all that can be worked to advantage and I believe thoroughly in the side walk; you make up in quality what you possibly lose in quantity—and that's another thing strongly in favor of the wide house. The quality certainly is better—and quality is what we fight for.''

''Twelve thousand plants, eh!'' I said. ''It must take a lot of wiring?''

''About eleven miles—more than I'd care to walk this cold day.

''The heating is steam—the gravity system. You see all these houses are connected with center passages and the 8-inch mains and 5-inch returns are in trenches right through them. There are two 1¼-inch pipes under each bench, two flows under one bench, two returns under the next lower, and four 1¼-inch pipes hanging on each side of the house.''

''Do you think the large house is cheaper to heat?'' Here the foreman chimed in emphatically.

''Decidedly. We haven't figured it out on a percentage basis, but here is a comparison: When there are two pipes on the 18½-foot house, then by the same token there should be four on the 37½-foot house and six on the 55-foot, but we only run three on the 37½-foot and four on this.''

''How do we account for it? Well,'' said Mr. Coddington, ''there isn't so much outdoors about the big house and then there's that big volume of heated air up there, and as I said before, once heated up it is easy enough to keep up. Yes, there is a great economy and convenience in working one of these large houses, to my mind that's one of the strongest points.

''Now you must see the workroom, we wanted it as near fireproof as possible. The siding is plaster board with a pebble-dash finish on the outside and this floor is made with iron beams and brick arches between, the whole thing cemented over. Another time we would make a solid concrete floor and no bricks. In the boiler-cellar these concrete walls were built right in the trenches without any framing, and then the cellar dirt dug out. An experiment, but it worked and saved all that expense of framing a mould.

''Yes, we are in every way satisfied with the construction of that big house. The firm that erected it knows its business and understands putting things through, as well as being pleasant to deal with. You can put me down as a firm believer in the iron-frame house, the wide house. But the next time you come, remember you are to take lunch with us.''

CARNATIONS

Care of Young Stock.

In speaking of the soil to use for potting the young carnation plants, I urged you to always bear in mind that nothing should be considered too good for them, but that they should be given every advantage possible. The same thought should be in your mind when you select the bench to set the pots on.

When obliged to throw out a lot of the blooming plants to make room for them, one is apt to throw out those that are the least promising, or those that have done the least in the past, regardless of what may have been the reason for the failure. The point is this: While of course it would seem unwise to throw out a bunch of plants that are in good condition and to keep a lot that are in a bad way, yet if the reason for the failure was poor light and poor ventilation, then it would be wiser to vacate the good bench to make room for the young plants. It would be folly to set the young plants on a bench that is so situated that it failed to grow good blooms. The young plants should have a bench that gets all the sunlight there is to be had and good ventilation. These are the two elements that promote a sturdy growth.

If you discard blooming plants to make room, don't fail to take out the soil and place in the bottom of the bench an inch of clean sand to set the pots on. To leave the soil in and set the pots on it is a lazy man's way. The drainage will be imperfect and bye and bye, when the roots fill the pots, they will go through the bottoms into the soil and a quick, soft growth will result, a bad condition to get your plants into.

Set the pots in straight rows across the bench and place the label the same as you do in the propagating bench. Be sure the first watering penetrates to the bottom of the pot. If your potting soil was in the right state of moisture, filling the pots with water once will be sufficient, but examine them and make sure. After that water only when needed to keep the soil from getting too dry. Be careful not to overwater them until the roots have worked through the soil in all directions. Shade from the sun for a few days to prevent wilting. You will have to be guided by the condition of the cuttings in regard to how long to continue shading them. Varieties that grow soft and fleshy take longer to catch hold than the wiry ones and you must shade as long as the sun wilts them. Four to six days is the usual time and in some cases a couple of days longer, during a few hours in mid-day. Look them over every day and water the dry spots with a can. You will find that where they are close to a steam pipe and where the sun strikes them most directly they will dry out in spots and will need water perhaps every day, while at other spots water may not be needed more than once in three days or more. This is important and should not be neglected.

Any spot that will require watering more than once each day is not fit for a young carnation plant, or any other plant for that matter. Later on, however, when the sun becomes quite warm, more watering will be needed, and, in many cases, twice a day may be necessary. By plunging the pots in the sand slightly this can be partly overcome, but more sand will be required on the bench. Sand that has been used for propagating makes splendid material for this use except in case it may be full of cutting bench fungus. In that case it should not be used in the greenhouse in any way at all.

Be careful that you do not mix your varieties, of which there is always more or less danger when handling the young plants. One young plant mixed in another variety now, may mean a dozen or more plants the next season and may be the cause of no end of trouble.

SINGLE CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

Every few years pleasing variations of form, or color, or type occur in the chrysanthemum, which serve to rejuvenate the interest in the flower, and, just at present, it would seem that it is the single varieties that are coming into popular favor. The singles are not a new type, but it is only within the last year or two that they have been greatly improved and brought into the limelight. The Review, a week or two ago, mentioned the great interest being taken in the singles in England and there is abundant evidence that this interest is also spreading along the eastern states of our own country, good exhibits having been made at several of the fall shows.

The big fellows will always have their admirers and the singles in no way encroach on their domain. As soon might one say that Paper Gontier will supplant American Beauty in the rose section, as to say that the single varieties will displace the giant exhibition sorts. But the singles have a place and satisfy for a time the longing for variety and change that, like hope, seems to "spring eternal in the human breast."

We now have in the single varieties every shade of color found in the other types and not a few unusual shapes. Some varieties, notably Edith Pegram, have two well defined rings of color in the flower, and in others the contrast between the eye, or disc, and the petals is striking and beautiful, the pure white varieties often having a golden yellow eye, the yellow kinds showing a large green eye, and so on.

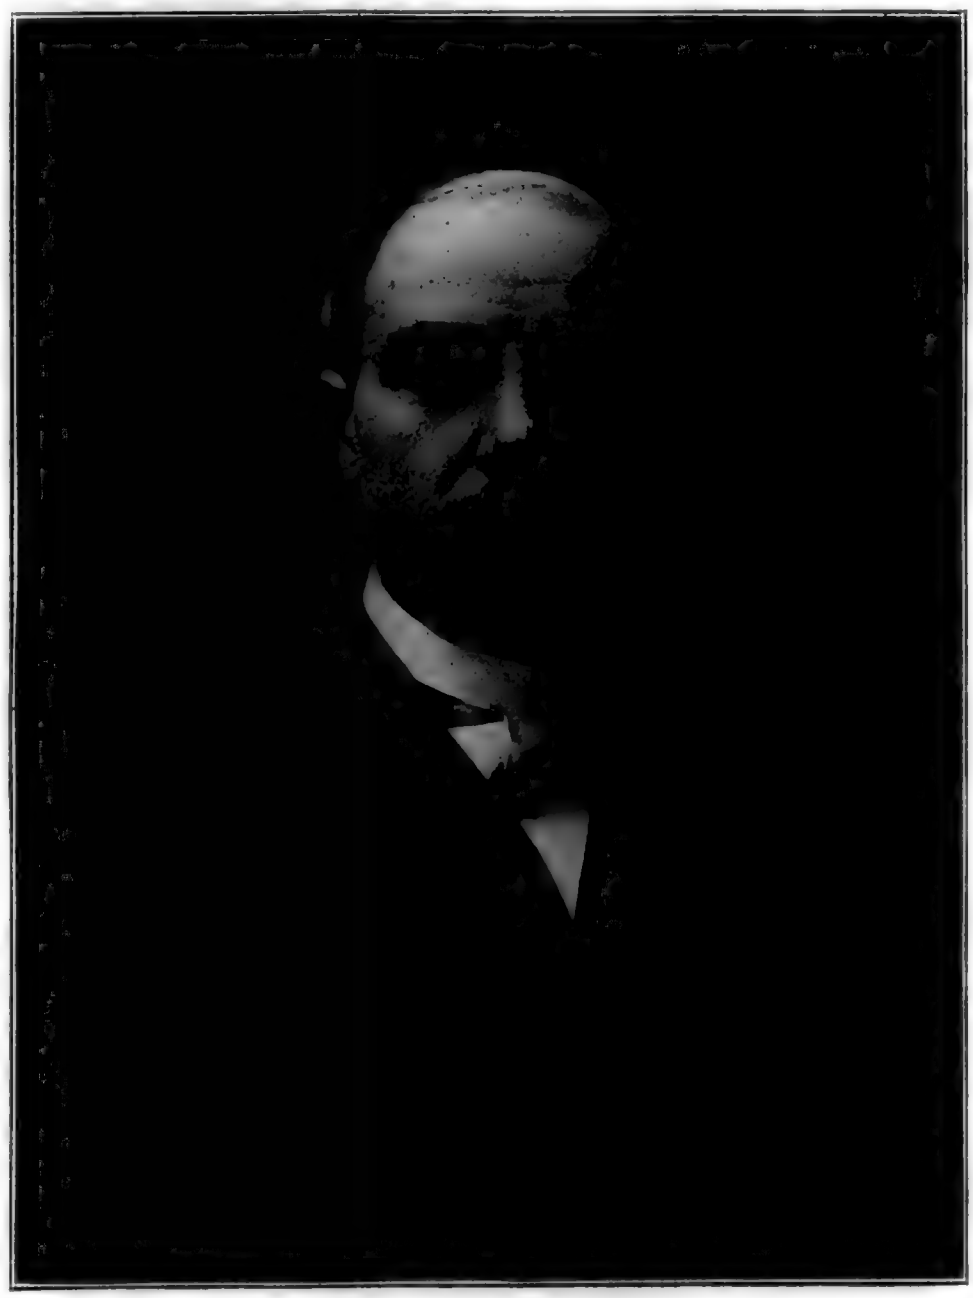
The flowers of one variety I grew this year, Cecil Denyer, are the exact representation of a cactus dahlia, while another, Dorothy Fortescue, produced flowers that, saving for color, are an exact representation of the flower of the poinsettia. Some of the varieties are deliciously scented, so much so, in fact, that bees were a nuisance in the houses where the plants were in flower.

While the flowers would get damaged, more or less, if grown entirely outside in the northern states, yet I think that there is an immense stretch of country where they will do finely and produce a wonderful wealth of color without any protection whatever.

It will, however, be as pot plants that singles will find most favor in the northern markets. So grown they are very beautiful and can be used in any kind of a decoration with telling effect. I have been asked whether they can be used for cut flower work, and I answer most assuredly, yes. Grown in a bench they can be cut in long, graceful sprays which sell readily, and many of the progressive growers that watch the market closely are preparing to grow them extensively next year. Another season will see them in regular supply in several of the larger cities and their decorative value will then be fully established.

Some of the most effective varieties as they grew with me were as follows: white, Gertrude, Nancy Perkins, Harold Shaw, and Miss T. C. Warden; yellow, Sir George Bullough, Kitty Bourne, Pretoria, Arthur Thorne and Golden Star; pinks, Mrs. E. Roberts, Edith Pegram, F. W. Smith, Ladysmith, Mrs. Ferguson and Herbert Henderson. Of odd colors there are several fine ones: Rev. W. E. Renfrey, crimson maroon; Crown Jewel, bronze; Earlswood Beauty, primrose; Felix, a very large, crimson bronze; J. T. Angus, deep cerise; Mrs. Baillie, chestnut, and Mary Richardson, deep salmon.

When they are better known, many a florist will find them money-makers, and, particularly, those florists who retail the stock they grow direct on the establishment, as they sell themselves if people can see them growing naturally.



Charles H. Totty.

PREPARING STOCK PLANTS.

Will you tell me how to prepare chrysanthemum stock plants for propagation? When the old plants are dug up should all suckers and sprouts be removed and only the bare root planted, or should some of them be left to give the roots a start? If they are to be stripped, should it be done when dug up, or left until they are planted out for cuttings?

W. C.

It is our practice to cut off all flower stalks and hard wood and to remove all suckers or root sprouts which are more than an inch long at the time of lifting the chrysanthemum plants which are to be held for propagating purposes. If they are stored under the benches they are placed in the coolest houses, near the edge of the walk, where they receive some light. The amount of water given and the extent to which they are pushed depends upon the season the cuttings are desired. The aim always is to secure close-jointed, thick-stemmed, stocky root sprouts for cuttings at the proper season. A stocky root sprout two or three inches long is very close to the ideal mum cutting. SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

John K. M. L. Farquhar.

Executive Committee Appointments.

The official year of the Society of American Florists begins January 1. President W. J. Stewart has announced the appointment of Samuel Murray, of Kansas City, and J. K. L. M. Farquhar, of Boston, as members of the executive committee to succeed Theodore Wirth and H. H. Ritter, whose terms expired December 31. Mr. Wirth had previously been reappointed by Mr. Kasting to succeed P. J. Hauswirth, who resigned as a member of the executive committee a few days before taking office as secretary. The executive committee therefore now is constituted as follows: One year, E. V. Hallock, Queens, N. Y.; W. H. Elliott, Brighton, Mass.; two years, F. H. Traendly, New York City; Theodore Wirth, Minneapolis; three years, Samuel Murray, Kansas City; J. K. M. L. Farquhar, Boston.

Of the new appointees, Samuel Murray is the only retail florist on the board. He is one of the best known florists in the country, for his thorough business methods and for his progressive conservatism, as well as for the large volume of his trade and the originality and fine artistic taste displayed in all his work. It may well be said that he is an example of what a retail florist should be, a leader, not only of the craft west of the Mississippi, but of the whole country as well. Mr. Murray has been a frequent attendant at the S. A. F. conventions, but his characteristic modesty is such that his name seldom has appeared in the reports of discussions; he ever has been more ready to listen to the opinions of others than to voice his own. His counsel will be of utmost value to the society.

J. K. M. L. Farquhar is a member of the firm of R. & J. Farquhar & Co., seedsmen. He is intimately acquainted with those in all departments of the trade in the east because of his many lecture tours among them. Mr. Farquhar is widely traveled, has visited every country of the globe where things of horticultural interest may be seen. Dozens of times a year he is called upon to deliver one or another of his illustrated lectures before the horticultural societies or florists' clubs of the east. He is a life member of the S. A. F.

NEW BEGONIAS.

In a European contemporary's account of a visit to the establishment of James Veitch & Son, Chelsea, near London, we find the following interesting note on new begonias:

"The great attraction at Feltham just now is found in a number of the smaller span-roofed houses devoted to winter-flowering begonias. The majority of the Veitchian group of winter-flowering begonias have been raised as a result of crossing Begonia socotrana with a tuberous variety, and it is with this section we are for the present most concerned. Now that Begonia Gloire de Lorraine is so commonly grown and so easily managed, the wonder is that these larger-flowered varieties with single or semi-double blooms in various shades of pink, rose and bright carmine do not figure more largely. Several capable gardeners who have paid special attention to the habit of the plants, who have remembered these are neither wholly tuberous or fibrous-rooted, and who have not over-potted or over-watered them on the one hand, nor absolutely dried them off on the other, have found no real cultural difficulties, but they have been rewarded by fine displays of plants during the winter. We venture to predict that, ere long, this race of winter-flowering begonias will become almost as popular as B. Gloire de Lorraine and its varieties. Meantime those who wish to grow something equally as good and less common than the latter should try the following varieties:

"The earliest to flower is John Heal, a variety of neat habit, and that carries a profusion of light carmine-rose colored single flowers. Either in 3-inch pots, for table decoration, or in larger size for vases or for the corservatory, this is a famous plant, and it has the unusual merit of holding its flowers until they shrivel; the blooms do not drop even under the influence of fog or gaslight. Mrs. Heal has larger flowers, and is one of the brightest of the set, its blossoms being rich carmine tinged with orange. Julius is remarkably free, and a taller grower than the foregoing, and its semi-double flowers of a charming pink shade are suggestive of oleander blossoms. Winter Perfection has flatter flowers than Julius, and these are of a deeper and rosy pink hue; it is a fine plant and flowers freely. Ensign has carmine-colored flowers, and these stand well when cut. Ideala is one of the earlier varieties, and so also is Success; both have rosy carmine flowers, but are quite distinct.

"Two other begonias of considerable merit are B. Agatha and B. Agatha compacta. These are more nearly akin to B. Gloire de Lorraine, but of more compact habit, exceptionally free flowering, rather brighter color, and with bright yellow anthers and stamens. The former was raised by crossing B. socotrana with B. Nuttalense.

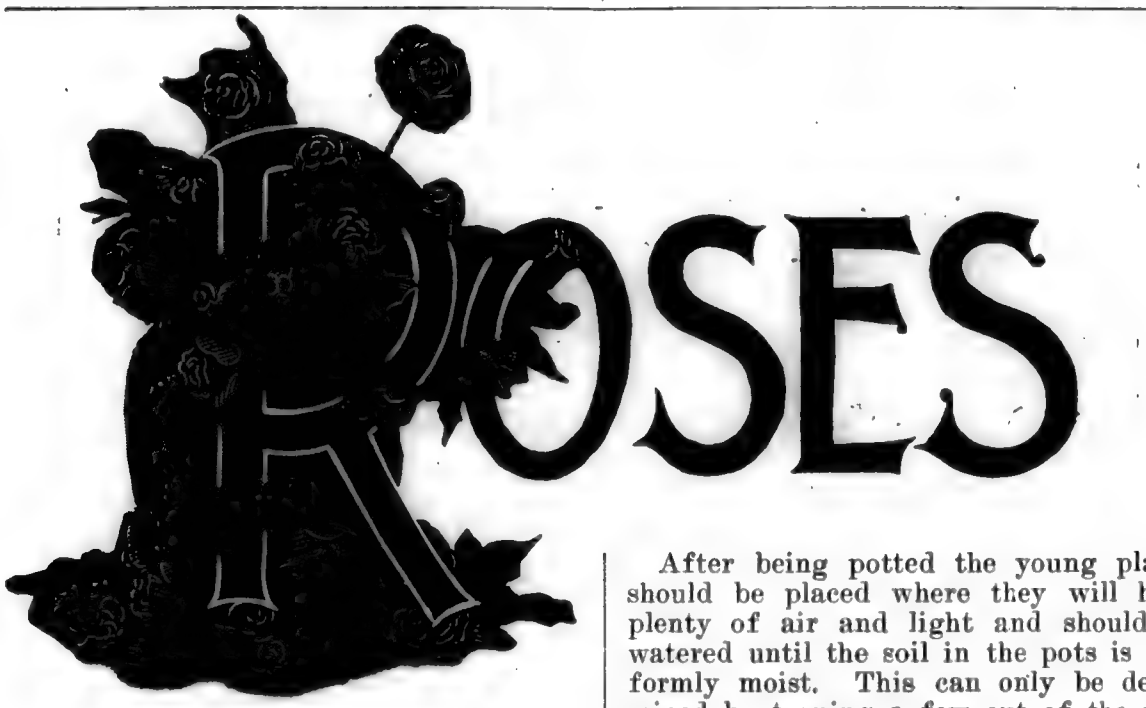
"The work of raising new varieties proceeds steadily, and we were shown a small batch of a new seedling in which the flowers were large, single and of a soft orange shade. For its color alone this is a most desirable addition, while as a parent it will probably be of special value and interest."



CATTLEYA LABIATA CANDIDA.

Cattleya labiata var. candida is a beautiful and attractive variety which flowered in Julius Roehrs Co.'s large collection of orchids in October of this year, among a lot of semi-established plants. It is a vigorous specimen, considering that the leading bulb gave two succeeding leads in sheath, of which one was in flower at the time the photograph was taken, giving four flowers on one spike. The second sheath, which flowered three weeks later, threw three more flowers on one spike, the plant being established in a 5½-inch pot.

Sepals and petals are almost pure white. It is a finely shaped flower, with a splendidly tinged purple lip in the back part of the throat.

Several other splendid varieties were in flower at the same time, such as Cattleya labiata var. Mrs. Julius Roehrs, also a fine form of this useful species of orchid, which was exhibited in Boston this fall, at the Massachusetts Horticultural Society's chrysanthemum show.

PROPAGATING BEAUTIES.

Owing to the large foliage and extra size of the cuttings, Beauty cuttings require more room in the bench than most other varieties. Because of the large foliage, unless they are set widely apart they retain the moisture too long, causing spot and rotting the leaves. Wherever these leaves overlap the foliage will become yellow and, in consequence, be of no more use to the cutting. For this reason great care must be exercised in watering, syringing and ventilating so that the foliage may be entirely dry before night.

To preserve the leaves on Beauty cuttings requires constant care and watchfulness, particularly as regards the temperature of the sand and house, as cuttings which have lost their foliage, although they may be nursed along and grown into presentable plants, never possess that vitality so essential to successful Beauty culture. A temperature of 62 degrees in the sand with a house temperature of 52 degrees to 54 degrees will cause a good root formation in twenty-eight or thirty days without in the least impairing the vitality of the plants or causing them to shed their leaves.

The foliage being large and requiring a fair supply of water to keep it fresh, should also for the first ten days, or until the callus has formed, be shaded from intense sunshine, after which the shading can be entirely removed.

No delay should take place after the roots have formed until they are potted as this rose, above all others, being of such a rank growing nature, if checked at this stage will scarcely ever recover sufficiently to make a plant fit for benching.

After being potted the young plants should be placed where they will have plenty of air and light and should be watered until the soil in the pots is uniformly moist. This can only be determined by turning a few out of the pots and examining the balls.

If the weather is bright they should be shaded from bright sunshine until root action has recommenced, when the shading should be entirely removed. They succeed well in a temperature of 56 degrees to 58 degrees at night, with a day temperature ranging from 65 degrees to 80 degrees, according to intensity of sunshine.

Being of quick growth they should always have plenty of space on the bench to insure a free circulation of air among the foliage and so secure a stocky growth.

HYBRID PERPETUAL ROSES.

I wish to plant a few hundred hybrid perpetual and climbing field-grown roses into pots for counter trade next spring. What time should I plant them to have them in bud and bloom by Memorial day? I will have to buy the dormant plants and wish to know if it will injure them if frozen in transit. L. M. B.

It is a pity you did not think of this last November, when the nurserymen were digging their field-grown roses. Then you could have potted them and had them down outdoors, covering pots and tops with three or four inches of soil, a plan which we entirely believe in. Now the ground is frozen this is not so easy, for, outside, it will be difficult to find any dry soil for covering. It is frozen one day and mud the next. Order your plants at once; and here I must answer the question about freezing:

It will do no harm if the tops of these roses should be frozen. We know the hybrid perpetual roses and Ramblers are subjected to zero weather during the winter, without harm, and the roots, or rather the soil around them is often tight, but when dry the roots should never be frozen. There are many trees and shrubs, perfectly hardy, the roots of which must often freeze solid during winter; but they are in a natural state, gradually and naturally thawing out, and receive no harm. But it is quite a different condition when the roots are deprived of their natural element, the soil, and then exposed to frost.

Nurserymen, I know, are particular that the roots of young trees and shrubs should not be exposed to frost, so instruct the parties you buy from to well protect the roots. As soon as received lay them in a frame in five or six inches of soil and cover the roots carefully and four or five inches up the stem. Leave them there till the first week in March. If the frame is covered with sash, give ventilation on all bright, warm days, or the eyes may get a premature start. Early in March pot them and start in a cool house. The hybrid perpetuals will want to be cut down to within six inches of the pot, but you need not do this till you see the eyes swell, when you can tell better just how high or low to prune them. The Ramblers will not want any pruning except to shorten back the ends of the unripened tops of the canes. Pot firmly and the first two weeks under glass syringe frequently. W. S.

HOLLYHOCKS.

History of the Flower.

Some little time ago I had the pleasure of inspecting the cultivation of hollyhocks in their latest and most improved form at the nurseries of Messrs. Webb & Brand, Saffron Walden, England; although I had seen double hollyhocks grown for some years, the named sorts in these nurseries were a great surprise and source of gratification to me.

As is well known, these nurseries are famed, and enjoy a higher reputation for hollyhocks than any other horticultural concern. Hollyhocks became associated with Saffron Walden nearly a hundred years ago, through the efforts of the local shoemaker, who cultivated them, hybridized and raised new varieties. It appears that two double forms, and two only, had been known to cultivation for 300 years before this shoemaker commenced to cross these two, and raise other double forms. After a time the local seedsman, Wm. Chater, became interested in this amateur's work, and there we have the origin of Chater's improved double hollyhocks, known to every horticulturist. Publishing his first catalogue of named varieties in 1847, he yearly added improved sorts until about 1873, when the hollyhock fungus made its appearance.

This disease for a time quite mastered Mr. Chater and many of his best varieties were lost. For many years no plant could be obtained free from the disease and hollyhocks were rarely seen; but for some years now George Webb, of Webb & Brand, has improved the few remaining varieties of Chater, and also discovered a mixture and a method of cultivation by which the disease can be combatted and prevented.

Propagation.

Before the disease made its appearance, hollyhocks were propagated by means of cuttings, grafting, budding, and by seed, the three former methods requiring the old plants to be wintered under glass, but these processes simply propagated the disease and ruined the plants, consequently seed became the only successful method of increase. Mr. Webb has by selection and cross-fertilization obtained a class of named varieties of every color, except blue, which will come ninety per cent true to color and form. By continual selection and application of his own mixture for checking the disease, the plants he sends out and the plants obtained from his seed are practically immune from any attack of disease. Briefly, his methods are the following:

Basket Arranged by J. J. Foley, New York.

Culture.

The seed is sown in the open ground, in single drills, on well prepared soil, made fine and rich. During the months of May and June, if the weather is favorable, it will soon germinate and form one single taproot. When this gets the size of a cedar pencil the plants are slightly raised and this taproot severed. This process will cause the plant to form a large quantity of surface fibers, when it will at once grow and make large base leaves. As soon as this growth commences they should be shifted to their flowering quarters.

Hollyhocks want a deep, rich, heavily manured soil. It must be well dug to the depth of two feet. Cow manure is the most suitable fertilizer. They enjoy a soil of a fairly heavy nature, and one that will hold moisture well. The final transplanting is done not later than the beginning of September. The hollyhock is only hardy in winter when firmly established. Then it can stand any amount of frost. They want plenty of room, quite three feet apart each way. The plants are sometimes attacked by grubs which work from the root into the center of the stem, causing the plant to rot off. A sharp lookout must be kept for any plants which may be found flagging from this cause, and a dressing of lime or some other grub remedy be applied.

If at all a dry season the plants will well repay a frequent heavy watering or a heavy mulching. For exhibition spikes the buds must be thinned out, and the spike made even and shapely. Webb & Brand get massive, well-filled spikes with sometimes four feet of blooms.

If they are intended to bloom a second year, the eyes on each crown will need protection from snow and rain.

Diseases and Remedies.

Further than the above method of growing from seed nothing is required.

In addition to the disease mentioned, there is another trouble in the form of a disease that attacks the plants just as they are coming into bloom. The plant simply withers and dies in a few hours, similar to the sleeping disease in tomatoes, only acting quicker. Mr. Webb says this is the result of overfeeding.

A dressing of tobacco powder and carbolic acid mixed together, sprinkled on the under surface of the leaves, is one preventive for the fungus disease, and will also destroy the red spider, from which the plant is much troubled. The following is the recipe which Mr. Webb regularly uses: One bushel slaked lime, one peck of soot, two pounds flour of sulphur, two ounces sulphate of copper finely powdered. Allow the lime to cool before mixing well together. Apply during cool, dull weather, using a French bellows.

Best Sorts.

The following is a list of named sorts, recommended as being the finest of their color and the best double shape, free from any trace of disease: Amaranth, amaranth-pink; Alfred Chater, mottled rose; Apple Blossom, white tinted pink; Black Knight, black; Constance, salmon rose; Crimson Queen, dark crimson; Fire King, brilliant red; Joy, cerise; Ovid, clear rose; Miss Lizzie King, yellow; Peri, sulphur; Talisman, cream. J. B.

was raised by crossing B. socotrana with B. Nuttalense.

"The work of raising new varieties proceeds steadily, and we were shown a small batch of a new seedling in which the flowers were large, single and of a soft orange shade. For its color alone this is a most desirable addition, while as a parent it will probably be of special value and interest."

CATTLEYA LABIATA CANDIDA.

Cattleya labiata var. candida is a beautiful and attractive variety which flowered in Julius Roehrs Co.'s large collection of orchids in October of this year, among a lot of semi-established plants. It is a vigorous specimen, considering that the leading bulb gave two succeeding leads in sheath, of which one was in flower at the time the photograph was taken, giving four flowers on one spike. The second sheath, which flowered three weeks later, threw three more flowers on one spike, the plant being established in a 5½-inch pot.

Sepals and petals are almost pure white. It is a finely shaped flower, with a splendidly tinged purple lip in the back part of the throat.

OBITUARY.

Miss Elsie Biggam.

Miss Elsie Biggam, daughter of Mrs. M. A. Biggam, of Leavenworth, Kan., died December 28. She was a popular young lady and leaves a large circle of sorrowing friends. Mrs. Biggam has the sympathy of the trade.

Charles Barton.

Charles Barton, night watchman at R. Wessling's greenhouse, at Minneapolis, Minn., died December 26 as a result of burns. He was on his way to the boiler-room, carrying a lantern, when he stumbled and fell. While unconscious the lantern exploded, covering him with oil. Firemen soon arrived, but too late to save his life.

A GERMAN VIEW.

The opinions of a rosarian published in a German journal concerning the celebrated new roses, Richmond, Liberty and Gen. MacArthur, may afford interest to our readers. The writer states that: In the summer of 1905 he budded several dwarf stocks of the dog rose with the variety Richmond, standing in carefully prepared land. The plants were not attacked by mildew this year, from which fact it must not be inferred that it is mildew-proof. There is great similarity between the flowers of Richmond and Liberty, and the growth of the former is more vigorous than of the latter. As regards floriferousness these two are about equal.

Breeders of roses have in recent years been endeavoring to raise hybrid teas with blooms equalling our dark, velvety hybrid perpetuals, or at the least closely resembling these, but this aim has been as little reached in Richmond as in Liberty. Of all the new varieties which have as yet been brought into commerce, Etoile de France comes nearest to this ideal. It is a fuller bloom than either, is certainly a stronger grower, and it produces flowers continuously till stopped by frost; the color is dark and texture velvety. As an early forcer Richmond is to be preferred to Etoile de France, for, being less full, the buds open more quickly. Apart from this fact most rosarians would prefer the latter.

The variety Gen. MacArthur came out at the same time as Richmond, and the beautiful dark velvety blooms that appeared in the summer months gave rise to great expectations, only to be dissipated in the autumn by the extreme paleness of the tint.—Horticultural Trade Journal.

A NEW HYBRID TEA ROSE.

Of the four new hybrid teas distributed by M. Pernet-Ducher, the famous French raiser, in the autumn of 1905, Mme. Mélanie Soupert is facile princeps; moreover, it is quite distinct from any other variety with which I am acquainted. Perhaps fault will be found with it on account of its extreme variation of coloring, but this seems peculiar to many of the newer hybrid teas, of which Prince de Bulgarie may be cited as a notable example.

My best flowers of Mme. Mélanie Soupert were cut early in July, before the effects of the hot, scorching weather had begun to make themselves felt. The buds of this rose are long and pointed, and open into semi-double, globular flowers with large, deep petals; on the outside these are a soft salmon-white tinged with light carmine-rose, and on the inside a light apricot-pink with a most vivid yellow base, almost the color of the Austrian Yellow briar. Later on in the season, however, all these charming tints were lost, due most probably to the extreme heat and drought, and I should judge that in a cool season this rose will be seen at its best. Certainly the first flowers were of exquisite beauty, and it was a considerable disappointment that the later ones should have had rather a washed out appearance. The growth of the plant is in every way satisfactory, and the flower stalks strong and upright. The foliage is a dark, bronzy green; the wood strong and of vigorous branching growth. Should its coloring prove constant there should be a great future for this rose. In general habit it reminds me of Killarney.—Gardeners' Magazine.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

Christmas trade was better than last year, with plenty of stock. Brides, Maids and Gates sold readily at $3 to $4 per dozen, retail. Carnations brought $1.50, except Enchantress, which fetched $2 to $2.50 per dozen. Narcissi, Romans, stevia and sweet peas all cleaned up at good prices. Poinsettias with bracts fifteen to seventeen inches across on stems four feet long and with fine foliage sold for $5 to $6 per dozen; smaller ones, $3. There was a good demand for pot plants. Gloire de Lorraine begonias in 8-inch pans sold easily at $4.50 to $6 each. Cyclamens in 7-inch and 8-inch pans with thirty to forty flowers brought $2.50 to $4 each. Poinsettias in pans, primroses, cinerarias and azaleas all sold at good prices. H.

The Great Central Market.

The days following Christmas were a distinct disappointment to most of the wholesale houses in this market and, by the same token, to the growers whom they represent. The demands were not up to the sanguine expectations engendered by the enormous Christmas business. The carnation growers, especially, failed to realize on their hopes. There was comparatively little doing locally and the out-of-town demand, like that in the city, was almost exclusively from the best buyers, indicating that the Christmas drain upon the customers of the small retailers exhausted their resources, especially as compared with the between-holidays prices of cut flowers.

New Year's brought quite a little extra demand and Monday saw a lively market, but prices were several notches lower than at Christmas. Most of the stock was of splendid quality and by night the market was pretty well cleaned up except on the same lines that proved in oversupply for Christmas: white carnations, Paper Whites and other bulb stock. The charity ball New Year's eve helped many of the retailers and the market in general. Choice material for corsages was wanted, but the principal call was for decorations for the many fashionable dinners which preceded the dance.

After New Year's the market opened at a decidedly lower level of prices, although roses are holding up well in view of the largely increased supply. Beauties are of excellent quality and fairly abundant. There are now heavy cuts of Maid and Bride and quality is excellent in spite of the fact that we have had little sun. Killarney is superb and Richmond plentiful. The best still fetch $3 a dozen. Not so many Chatenay are seen as last year, but they are fine.

Poinsettias have been a glut since Christmas. There are so many of them that it is impossible to clear them out, although they have been used for many table decorations. The carnation crops are heavy, as judged by recent standards, and there is much good stock available. Violets were in short supply a few days following Christmas, but soon became equal to all requirements, as it was reported Chicago was better than any other market for Christmas. Callas have become quite plentiful, but Harrisii are not abundant. There are Paper Whites and Romans more than the market needs. A few tulips are seen and jonquils have made their appearance, selling briskly. Some splendid mignonette is offered. Stevia is passing.

There is a fair call for green goods, but the best demand is for bunches rather than strings.

Kennicotts to Move.

Shortly after it was announced that Marshall Field had bought the Lemoine block on Randolph street, the tenants were advised that the Field estate would not renew any of the leases. Kennicott Bros. Co. has occupied the basement of the building for seven years, but its lease expires next May. G. H. Pieser has had an eye open for a favorable location and a few weeks ago closed a lease on the large basement at 48 and 50 Wabash avenue. A part of the arrangement was that the landlord should construct a new entrance and make other improvements. It appears that to make the changes the other tenants and city building department had to be reckoned with, and this has caused delay, but the plans now suit all parties and the work is under way. It is the intention of the Kennicott Bros. Co. to move as soon as the remodeling is completed. The new quarters will be practically the same size as those at present occupied and excellently adapted to the cut flower business.

A Change in Policy.

Peter Reinberg has practically confined himself to growing roses and carnations and has been one of the best customers of some of the other wholesalers, for a certain proportion of his customers insist in looking to him for all their needs, in spite of the fact that he has not listed anything but roses and carnations in his price list. But now he plans to diversify, adding to his products until he has a full line, if results are up to expectations. Leonard Kill says arrangements have been made for pips for forcing a liberal supply of valley all this season, and other stock will follow; even violets may be tried. Mr. Reinberg says he probably shall not build this year, although he says he is in a receptive mood if any one wants to submit cheap prices on glass.

Smilax Goes the Limit.

J. W. Wolfskill is the proprietor of a fine store at Los Angeles, Cal. He has been in the growing end of the business for some time, but only recently opened the store, fitted up in the most approved fashion and handling a full line of the best stock. Twice since the opening he has ordered wild smilax of Kennicott Bros. Co., two cases going out by express last Saturday night. Surely that is the limit for the Alabama green. The express rate Chicago to Los Angeles is $11.50 per hundred pounds, so that Mr. Wolfskill pays fifteen per cent more for charges than the cost of the goods—and wild smilax at $5 per case in Chicago has already paid one good toll to the express company.

Various Notes.

Philip Kirchner, who is in charge of the Chicago conservatories of E. M. Barton, 4629 Greenwood avenue, has a beautiful pure white sport of Dr. Enguehard chrysanthemum which originated on his place this season. It has been given the name of Mrs. Enos M. Barton and Mr. Kirchner thinks so well of it that he will propagate all possible for next season. Several mum growers who have seen this white sport predict that it will prove to be one of the best varieties produced in years.

E. T. Wanzer, at Wheaton, is shipping in some excellent carnations. Victory is fine with him, also Enchantress. For white he grows White Lawson, Bountiful and Boston Market. Mrs. Nelson and Mrs. Lawson are his pinks. He had some good mums and now uses the space for propagating.

The good old year, 1906, was a warm member. Not only was the business pace the hottest on record, but the temperature was above the average to a surprising extent. The weather bureau keeps a record of each day's mean temperature and adding the daily excess the record shows that in 1906 we had 1,032 degrees more heat than normal. Also, there has been more wind and much less sun.

Miss A. L. Tonner, in the supply department of the A. L. Randall Co., says prospects for spring business are excellent. They still are opening new goods right along and find that it means something to gather a complete stock.

W. J. Smyth had a large amount of work Sunday for the funeral of J. E. Holden, manager of the retail store of Marshall Field & Co.

Miss Lillian Bowes, of Michigan City, Ind., was in town New Year's eve. She reports trade increasing steadily.

John Ziska is now personally handling the stock of the Chicago Rose Co., John Sterrett being no longer with the firm.

O. W. Frese, of the Poehlmann Bros. Co., spent the last few days of 1906 at home, nursing a severe cold.

Wietor Bros. are filling their benches formerly occupied by chrysanthemums largely with cuttings. They do an annually increasing business in rose and carnation cuttings and especially in chrysanthemums.

E. H. Hunt's express themselves as much better pleased with the way violets have acted in the last ten days than with the way white carnations have gone.

Joseph Foerster says that George Reinberg will not propagate roses and carnations as heavily this year as in previous seasons, the blooms lost in the process, at the present grade and prices, being worth more than the cuttings.

C. W. McKellar says the call for orchids, violets and valley was good between Christmas and New Year's.

C. H. Fisk, at Ogden avenue and Madison street, reports a record breaking Christmas trade, mostly in blooming plants. He purchased double the amount handled a year ago and cleaned it all out.

Weiland & Risch are propagating Killarney in large quantity, anticipating an even heavier demand than last year.

John D. Rockefeller has given the University of Chicago $2,500 for greenhouses for the botanical department.

H. F. Halle contracted a severe cold just before the holidays and he is sick in bed in consequence. His business, however, is reported prospering and his Christmas trade in plants was most gratifying.

The Empire Theater Co., Milwaukee, has been organized, Harry Lubliner, president, and Joe Trinz, secretary and treasurer. A new theater seating 800 is being built and will be ready for business in a month or two. A delegation from Chicago will attend the opening.

The E. F. Winterson Co. has put in a large stock of M. V. Garnsey's Japana and Anglais cut flower vases and find they sell well.

H. C. Wullbrandt has removed to Fifty-third and Madison, where he has just completed a new plant, a store and two greenhouses, the latter each 20x125. He reports business opening good.

Max Ringier, of Kennicott's, was taken ill in the store last Friday with a recurrence of his old trouble. His condition gave alarm for a day or two.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The Christmas trade was phenomenally large in the sale of blooming plants; with cut flowers it was as usual during a holiday rush. From all sides the report comes that in every respect it was most satisfactory and the growers certainly have little to complain of, as prices were high on all grades of stock. It was first thought that stock of all kinds would be scarce, but at the last moment there was plenty of almost everything. The wholesalers had some heavy orders booked. These were, in most cases, filled, both local and shipping orders.

American Beauties were somewhat scarce, also fancy stock in other roses, but of the lesser grades there were enough. Carnations went at top price; nothing was sold under $4 per hundred. Violets were not at all plentiful. The cloudy weather for three weeks kept them back. These were all cleaned up at $2 per hundred. In bulb stock the market had plenty of Romans, Paper Whites, and valley. On these no increase of price was asked. Christmas greens in holly, mistletoe and wreathing had an unprecedented demand.

Among the west end florists it was a foregone conclusion that the demand for plants would be large and they laid in a big stock, with hardly anything left the next day that was worth having. The same was true of the downtown florists, all of whom report a big Christmas business.

Various Notes.

President Irish and Chairman Frank Weber were out Thursday in the interest of the guarantee fund, among the business men, with good results. This week the other committeemen, W. C. Smith and A. J. Bentzen, will take up the work among the north side business men. The fund is growing each day.

Frank Fillmore, one of the club's hardest workers, was badly hurt last week by slipping on the ice near his home. From reports today he is mending nicely.

Alex Siegel will, after the first of the year, move to his new location, Broadway and Washington avenues, in the old Grand Leader building.

W. J. Pilcher and J. Potts, old-timers in the business, helped out Mrs. M. M. Ayers during the holiday rush.

Arthur Ellison was again in harness during the holiday week, helping out the old folks, who report one of the biggest holiday's business they ever had.

W. C. Hill Floral Co., of Streator, Ill., is sending to Smith & Co. some of the fine light pink Lawson, named Melody. This is really a fine seller and in great demand among the retailers.

Adolph Brix, on St. Louis avenue, had the best Christmas trade in years. Mr. Brix is one of the big buyers at the wholesale markets.

W. C. Smith has been appointed superintendent of the chicken show, which will be held next week. A better selection could not have been made.

The St. Louis Horticultural Society held a meeting Tuesday, December 18, at C. C. Sanders' place on Delmar avenue. Harry Young presided, with ten members present. They decided to hold an open meeting this month, when lectures will be given by prominent speakers on horticulture and other matters pertaining to the society's interest. This meeting will be held the third Tuesday in January, the regular meeting night.

The members of the St. Louis Florists' Club will meet next Thursday afternoon in the new hall in the Burlington building, 810 Olive street. The secretary will send notices to each member, as usual, and President Irish expects a large attendance, as the flower show committee has something extra to report, which will be of great interest to all the members.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.—The boiler-house of the cemetery greenhouse burned down on the morning of December 24. A portion of the roof of the greenhouse was also totally destroyed, damaging some of the plants. Quick work by a force of carpenters saved the remainder of the plants from freezing.

Current Comment.

As was expected, Christmas turned out to be a time of universal gladness and the florist came in for his share of the benefit. A few days previous to the great day we had bitter cold weather, close to zero, which called for a great amount of wrapping and other precautions against a chill.

As near as the writer can glean, it was largely a plant Christmas and of these the favorites were the azalea, pans of poinsettias and Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. Please notice that the single-stemmed poinsettia, either dwarf or tall, has no longer a charm. They must be in pans, and of them there were not too many. But plants did not monopolize all the sales. Roses and carnations held their own and violets were in great demand, also valley, narcissi and Romans. Holly was for sale at almost every street corner, yet the demand at the greenhouses was as good as ever and all that there was time to make into wreaths met with a ready sale.

There was a swell ball last week on our fashionable Delaware avenue and the floral decorations were more extensive than usual. There were baskets of orchids, banks of begonias and poinsettias, but my excuse for mentioning the party was the particular fact that chief among the decorations were 500 Richmond roses with stems three feet long and American Beauties with stems five feet long. The decorations were in charge of Roland Cloudsley (who never was with Thorley), of the Wm. Scott Co., and the roses came grandly packed from Poehlmann Bros. Co., Chicago. After seeing those Richmonds unpacked, never talk to me about Liberty being on the same street with Richmond. It would take ten acres of Liberty to cut as many long-stemmed flowers. W. S.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

Roses were not plentiful and sold at a very high price at Christmas. American Beauties retailed at from $8 to $24 per dozen. Brides and Bridesmaids retailed from $2 to $5 per dozen, and of red roses there were not near enough to go around. Good carnations were scarce and sold at from $1 to $2.50 per dozen. Only a few red were to be had. Some fine carnations were shipped in. Narcissi and Romans were plentiful and not much advanced in price. Violets were scarce and retailed at $4 per hundred. Poinsettias sold well in pots and pans but rather slow when cut. The florist who can grow them ten to twelve inches tall, with large bracts, would be strictly in it in this city. Holly was plentiful. Peyke Bros. received two carloads with 180 cases, arriving two days before Christmas, and sold it cheap, at $3.50 per case. Such as this gave the fakers a good chance and their cries could be heard on almost every corner. One commission-house had about two carloads on hand that was cut too early and the result was that it was too dry and would not sell at any price. We were informed that there were a couple of carloads refused on the track on account of being too dry. Mistletoe was plentiful, mostly shipped from the south. Green roping seemed to be plentiful, for there is less call for this every year, wild smilax taking its place for large decorations.

Red bells sold rather slowly among the florists and prices were low. The sale for fancy baskets of plants and plants in pots and pans is increasing every year and many are glad of it. The weather was ideal, making it easy to deliver potted plants. We can all say it was one of the best Christmases we ever had.

Various Notes.

Albert Barbee reports business to be the largest he has ever had before on Christmas, in both cut flowers and plants. His holly was all made up in wreaths, about 400 in all. They were mostly sold for cemetery purposes, as his greenhouses are located near one of the best cemeteries in this city. He had a large number of fine poinsettias which he sold quite readily.

Arthur Newell says that trade was fifteen per cent better than last year. He sold roses at from $3 to $5 a dozen and the stock he handled was extra fine.

Mr. Freudenthal had an excellent trade, but says that the price for shipped-in stock was too high and thought that some of the carnations seemed to be pickled.

The Alpha Floral Co. reports business to be immense. On December 24 they sold $708 more than on the same day last year, or just double last year's sales on that day. Mr. Elberfield claims he had the largest shipment of cut flowers by express of any florist in the city, as it took a two-horse wagon to cart the boxes from the depot to his store. There is little doubt that this company handles

Jacob Tobler has been ill for some time with lumbago. He reports a good trade, especially on holly wreaths, and could have sold a third more than he did if he had had them ready.

Miss M. Dalley had a fine display in her windows and did a fine business for Christmas.

William L. Rock Flower Co. had the handsomest window decorations during the holidays of any store on Walnut street. They carried a full line of cut flowers and made-up baskets of plants of the most artistic character.

Of course Sam Murray had a big week's business; he always gets a lion's share.

Ed Humfeld reports business for Christmas week to have been a record-breaker.

Miss J. E. Murray had a fine display and did a rushing business.

William Bastian had an excellent trade at his new location on Thirteenth and Grand avenue, making holly wreaths while the customers waited.

The W. H. Humfeld Floral Co. reports its business the heaviest for fifteen years.

R. S. Brown has been ill for some time and could not take an active part in Christmas trade, but reports good business.

Ed Ellsworth, formerly manager of George Kellogg's Grand avenue store, is now about to build a store at Woodworth avenue and Main street. W. H. H.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Since Christmas trade has been quiet. Owing to the mild weather which has prevailed, more flowers have arrived than had been anticipated and with a rather light demand the supplies have been more than sufficient for all requirements. Prices have dropped to figures prevailing ten days before Christmas. Both roses and carnations are in good supply. Top prices on the latter have fallen to $6. Violets are in rather oversupply. Average price for good stock is $1 per hundred, but some doubles have sold lower. Chrysanthemums are still seen but the quality is now poor.

Lilies and callas are arriving sufficiently for all needs. Some good mignonettes are seen and there is an oversupply of Paper Whites and Roman hyacinths. Quite a lot of stevia is still sent in but it sells slowly. Tulips and yellow narcissi are not yet of good quality. Quite a little freesia is seen in the retail stores, but this flower is not much handled at the wholesale market or commission houses. Fischer's Purity is seen with long stems. Poinsettias met with a slow sale after Christmas. In sweet peas, Mont Blanc is most in evidence, some Earliest of All being also seen. There is no change in green stock, for which the demand is not brisk at present.

Later reports on Christmas trade indicate an increased volume all around over 1905. Growers who threw quantities of flowers on the market on Christmas day had to take lower prices. We heard some complaints of plants arriving from retailers in a frozen condition owing to being insufficiently wrapped up.

New Year never makes more than a trifling difference in the market here. Violets sold well. These, lily of the valley and roses were used as gifts to some extent, but the effect on prices was hardly noticeable.

Various Notes.

Robert Cameron sailed on the S. S. Admiral Sampson on December 26 for Jamiaca. He will collect plants for the Harvard Experimental Station at Solidad, Cienfuegos, Cuba, where Robert M. Grey, late of North Easton, is located. After spending some time in Cuba Mr. Cameron will return by way of Havana to New York.

The inaugural meeting of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society for the year 1907 will be held at noon January 5 in Horticultural hall. Business will include inaugural address by the new president, Gen. S. M. Weld; reports of trustees and of various committees. The winter lecture course will, it is expected, commence on January 12.

F. E. Palmer has been confined to his bed by sickness the last few days.

Some remarkably fine Fischer's Purity freesia is coming in from William Nicholson, the stems being of exceptional strength.

Fair Maid carnation holds its own well in the local markets. Such flowers as A. Roper and J. W. Foote are sending to the Music Hall market are hard to beat.

Edward Wood, of Lexington, is bringing in some excellent sweet peas from his new house.

Christmas materialized a general result almost identical with the predictions as to prices, sales and satisfaction. From the retailers' standpoint there can be no sincere fault-finding, for every plant and combination of plants in hamper, basket, box or jardiniere that had merit in quality and artistic arrangement, sold at a good price and not enough were left to dress the windows respectably in any florist's store worthy of the name.

Cut flowers, too, were not held at abnormal prices by the wholesalers and the antagonism to these and the suggestions as to plant preference were not so general as in other years. Beauties were retailed at $25 a dozen, Maids and Killarney at $10, Richmond at $12 to $15, carnations $1.50 to $6 and violets at $3 a hundred. At these rates the flower-loving public of this city on special occasions like Christmas and Easter do not complain. They have been educated to expect it and the return to more reasonable figures surprises and allures them.

The wholesalers would have had no fault to find with Christmas if after maintaining prices at fair rates all day Monday the evening shipments had not been overwhelming. Much of the stock was cut so close that the buds were too small to find, while some of it gave evidence of the pickling process, and both had to go into the "discard" Christmas evening.

You can imagine the rose slump on the day after. White roses and carnations, especially the former, were cut to almost summer rates until the pressure of overabundance was relieved. This will account to the growers for the general average not coming up to expectations; while the very best held firm, the medium and lower grades all suffered.

Violets alone maintained their values even up to the end of the week and were selling as high as $1.25 per hundred on Saturday. New Year's prices will average a little over half the price of cut flower rates at Christmas. Orchids and gardenias were in extensive demand and, while prices were wisely not advanced, all the varieties were well called for and nothing worth mentioning was left when the local and shipping demands were filled.

The few mums left were of only medium quality and were snapped up quickly. Of holly, mistletoe, wreathing, wild smilax, the market was swept absolutely bare. In some of the green goods centers ferns and galax was the entire stock left by noon of Christmas. And the supply men never had such a clearing up. Baskets, vases, all the novel importations, immortelles, wreaths and Christmas bells—everything was taken. Shipments were made day and night up to the evening of December 24 and still the call was incessant. So, all things considered, it was a good Christmas and there was little to complain of. The pickling was lighter than usual and is evidently growing more unpopular. The weather was not severe. The love of flowers by the general public was never more in evidence.

The Telephone Situation.

Few even of the smallest flower stores in New York or Brooklyn are without a telephone and in many of the big retail as well as wholesale stores so large a part of the orders is received over the 'phone that more than one line is necessary. Two telephone companies in New York would be a nuisance and an added expense without in any way improving the service. Every florist is interested that a report of an investigation concerning the telephone service of thirty-six cities has been submitted to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment by Harry P. Nichols, assistant engineer, of the Bureau of Franchises. Such benefits as have been derived from competition elsewhere, together with the disadvantages or inconvenience due to it, appear to be set forth impartially. Mr. Nichols refers to the progressive policy of the Bell Company in New York during the last two years, its reduction of rates and its energetic attempts to develop the use of the telephone. The company has offered yearly compensation to the city, and also so to reduce its rates from time to time that the earnings shall not exceed ten per cent upon the capital actually invested. "If investigation should show a fair capitalization," the report says, "and if the company's offer be adequate in other respects, there would seem to be no advantage in granting a franchise to an independent company." This meets general approval.

Various Notes.

The plantsmen are already planning for Easter and have a complete closing out of Christmas plants to encourage them.

A goodly number of carnation growers from New York and vicinity will attend the Toronto convention. Those of us who were born in Canada and know something of its warm-hearted hospitalities can safely assure the visitors of an unusually vigorous welcome and the sleigh riding and curling and other winter sports so dear to the Canuck heart will be an unusual treat for those who come from this climate of dampness and who will realize for the first time the inspiration and healthfulness of a Canadian winter. John Dunlop and his lieutenants will demonstrate the brotherhood of American florists as it has never been shown before. It will be an inexcusable blunder to miss the Toronto carnation convention. New York should have a representation of at least twenty-five.

The next meeting of the New York Florists' Club will be held January 14, one week from Monday evening, at the Grand opera house. Final arrangements for the trip to Toronto will then be completed and possibly a special car arranged for. The fare will be one and one-third, and the New York Central probably selected. At the club the new officers will begin their duties and President Totty will elaborate his policy and make his appointments. There is no doubt of the club's continued growth and prosperity.

Saturday evening of this week the ball of the wholesale florists' employees takes place at the Manhattan Casino, One Hundred and Fifty-fifth street and Eighth avenue. The Sixth and Ninth avenue elevated lands you at the door. The Twenty-second regiment band has been engaged and the boys deserve encouragement. A good many of the wholesalers have promised to attend.

The small Gladiolus advertisement we had in the not only brought inquiries from all parts of this country but from Europe as well. The REVIEW is the paper to advertise in. It seems to go everywhere.

S. HUTH

Cuyahoga Falls, O.
Dec. 22, 1906.

The New Year will see the beginning of a brilliant season in society that should quickly manifest its effect in the increased prosperity of the florists. The Old Guard ball in January will have the President as a guest. The other events follow each other in never-ceasing rapidity, the Arion, the Emerald and a host of others. The opera season is at its height in two great houses and a hundred theaters are crowded nightly. Everything betokens prosperity, and prosperity means progress to floral art and home decoration. So great are the good times that the preachers have begun to warn the public of their danger and even Rockefeller and a few other poor millionaires are advising the people to go slow.

The Cut Flower Exchange is an illustration of good business management. Its dividend just declared for the current year is ten per cent.

The window displays by the prominent retailers before Christmas excelled any previous demonstration and doubtless accounted partially for the general interest. To particularize would be unfair and to give all their due would make necessary more space than the REVIEW would grant me. Every season adds to the artistic combinations of plant and color and to the novelties that have become now a necessity in this blase and critical metropolis, where one lives a lifetime in a day.

The forty-eight hours before Merry Christmas dawned were interesting, every one of them, and it took them all to visit the big retail establishments and the wholesale markets and stores and see for oneself what devotion to the interests of growers and customers means. Dozens of employees and many of the principals had no sleep during these two long days and nights and some put in seventy-two hours without a wink, while the happy growers slept the sleep of certain surplus in the bank account, and no further winter worry on the coal question. The rest of the year is velvet for them.

I was talking with the author of "How to Grow Violets" Saturday and he declared a competent grower could raise as good violets around Chicago as any one in Dutchess county. It all depends on knowing how. He never has visited Chicago, however, and was not posted on the wet air, the smoke, and the level country. But even when I told him he said, "Let them go out a hundred miles, then, where the air is dry and the hills are to be found, and put a competent man to work and I'll guarantee as good success as any one achieves at Rhinebeck." So there you are, and it is surely worth the trial, for violets lose all the sweetness in a thousand-mile journey and New York can use all the violets that are worth using, grown within a hundred miles, and use them while they are warm. J. Austin Shaw.

WILLIAMSPORT, PA.

Fire at Evenden Bros.' lower greenhouses at 3 o'clock on the morning of December 24 did damage which will reach $6,000, with no insurance. The fire was discovered by the watchman in a pile of coal behind the boilers. He called William Evenden, who resides near the lower greenhouses, but the fire had gained such headway that the interior of the boiler room was a mass of flames. Seeing that the situation was serious he called upon the Williamsport fire department and in the bitter cold two companies fought for three hours, doing splendid service in preventing the spread of the flames.

The boiler house was consumed and all of the woodwork of the ice house was burned. A corn crib containing about 400 bushels of corn was practically ruined and a wagon shed was destroyed. One end of one of the greenhouses was burned out.

The contents of five of the big greenhouses were frosted through the lack of heat, the rose and carnation houses suffering most. Oil stoves were hurriedly obtained and rushed into the other houses to try to save their contents. Temporary connections were quickly made with another boiler and it was made to help out as far as possible. The Christmas stock had all been taken to the upper greenhouses and so escaped the general destruction.

As soon as the ruins of the boiler house were cool enough to work in Mr. Evenden had a force of men ready and began at once to clear away the debris. The work of installing a temporary heating plant was begun at once and a new permanent plant will be erected and put in operation as quickly as possible.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

Business has been extremely dull since Christmas, duller, in fact, than it has seemed for a number of years. New Year's was a good day, but by no means a little Christmas. Prices have been weak and irregular, there being at times quantities of this or that flower that could not be disposed of at anything like market value. The curious part of this is that entertaining has been going on at a brisk rate, parties and balls succeeding each other in rapid succession. While flowers in quantity are used for many of these festivities, their use has not been sufficiently general to make a serious impression on the market.

The dark weather has had a bad effect on the quality of some varieties of stock, making the better grades more difficult to supply than would ordinarily be the case. Beauties have been abundant and at times long-stemmed flowers were in oversupply. Tea roses of fine quality have found ready sale, but the majority of the stock coming in is only medium at present. Carnations have been more plentiful than seemed possible two weeks ago. Prices receded one-half immediately after Christmas, and have remained fairly firm since. Some exceptionally fine Beacon sent by Edward A. Stroud to the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co. realized Christmas prices at New Year's. But this was, of course, an exception to the rule, most of the fancies selling for one-half those figures. Gardenias are in good supply, thanks mainly to the skill of Robert Scott & Son, who have a large cut in sight. Violets have remained fairly steady since Christmas, the lack of sunshine cutting down the supply considerably. Sweet peas are more abundant.

To the Florists of America

The Florists' Supply House of America

H. Bayersdorfer & Co., 1129 Arch Street

Philadelphia, January 1, 1907.

WE desire to thank our many friends and customers for their liberal patronage extended to us during the past year. We also wish to gratefully acknowledge the kind indulgence shown us in the trying period of moving when it was not always possible to dispatch orders with that promptness for which we have established a reputation. We ask a continuance of your business for 1907, and promise that the best goods, the best facilities and our best efforts shall be at your command.

Wishing you a Happy and a Prosperous New Year, we are

Very truly yours,

H. BAYERSDORFER & CO.

The best flowers are now sufficiently good to interest the most fastidious buyers. Poinsettia is cut out with some growers, but there is still sufficient in sight to meet every requirement. In fact, the demand is perceptibly falling off. A feature of the orchid market is the addition of some choice flowers of Lælia anceps alba, pure white, with long stems, seen at the Leo Niessen Co.'s. Trumpet major has made its appearance. It is of fair quality and sells well.

The Florex Gardens.

D. Fuerstenberg, Henry C. Geiger and Eugene Bernheimer have applied for a charter under the Commonwealth of the State of Pennsylvania, which will enable them to grow and sell plants and flowers under the name of the Florex Gardens. They have purchased fifty acres of ground at North Wales, on the Philadelphia & Reading railway, about three-quarters of an hour from this city. The ground is admirably adapted for greenhouse purposes, being so situated that a siding for coal is possible, while the soil is considered by the experts as first-class for growing roses and carnations. One greenhouse 150x425 feet, single-span, will be constructed this season for American Beauty roses. George Samtman will be manager or superintendent of this plant, which will be added to from time to time. The idea is to grow Beauties, which are required by the sister enterprise, the Floral Exchange, and which have never quite come up to Mr. Fuerstenberg's standard at the Edgely greenhouses. It is also planned to grow carnations later. The name Florex may be best understood by describing it as a sort of abbreviated Floral Exchange, the idea being to keep the relationship between the two enterprises clearly in mind.

A number of years ago Leo Niessen strongly advised Phil to especially observe Mr. Fuerstenberg's horticultural plans, asserting that he would undoubtedly make his mark in the floral world. The present enterprise is the direct result of Mr. Fuerstenberg's visit to Canada last fall, where he saw and heard things that confirmed him in his belief that large houses are most desirable, from a grower's as well as from a business standpoint.

Bayersdorfer's New Store.

Through the courtesy of Sydney Bayersdorfer, Phil was enabled to verify the description of Bayersdorfer's new store given by proxy in these columns a few weeks ago. Everything was just as described then, excepting that the wonderful stock has been seriously depleted by the Christmas and New Year's orders. Great gaps had been made in the warerooms, which will soon be filled by the incoming shipments of Easter stock. Let no one suppose from this that orders for any staple or novel article on the catalogue could not be filled, but simply that thousands of orders evidently had been filled. The drying-room and roof garden were novel features that are being turned to excellent advantage. The workroom, filled with busy makers of wheat sheaves, was full of interest. Among the novelties were some exquisite wood boxes for lilies of the valley and violets, with those flowers hand painted on the covers. Mr. Bayersdorfer said that the new rattan Beauty vase for long-stemmed, fancy flowers, is meeting with brisk demand. Some reed hampers of original design were very attractive. A number of baskets and plant stands were pointed out that had been in vogue for many years and steadily increase in popular favor.

The Stokes Idea.

Walter P. Stokes always has ideas that are worth listening to, whether it be in greenhouse constructions, valley forcing or seed selling. His first catalogue, issued by the Stokes Seed Store, is well worthy careful perusal. Typographically it is extremely well gotten up, while the salient feature is evidently the idea impressed throughout upon the reader that "Stokes' Standard," whether it be of peas, beans, beets, or cabbage, is the highest standard and the one that you unquestionably ought to have. To secure this end Mr. Stokes has tested many varieties of vegetable and flower seeds at his Moorestown Nurseries, selecting only the best, paying the grower a fair price to secure his best products, and charging the buyer a fair price for a first-class article. Such methods will undoubtedly win the confidence of the seed-buying florists and gardeners.

Obituary.

We have the sad duty this week of recording three deaths since last report.

Mrs. Robert Scott, mother of Alex. B. Scott, died Sunday morning after a long illness.

Frank McDonald, an employee of Edward Reid, died Saturday night of typhoid fever, after an illness of several weeks.

The death of the married daughter of J. Otto Thilow, secretary of the Henry A. Dreer Co., occurred last week.

Various Notes.

M. Rice & Co. are already busy fixing up stock and getting in shape for a large Easter business, which this year comes very early, March 31.

The white cotton-holly wreath described in this column two weeks ago has been adopted by the Union League, and may be seen at its window on Broad street.

It is pleasant to see Paul Richter back in the H. F. Michell Co. seed store.

Alfred Burton had a large crop of Liberties for Christmas.

S. S. Skidelsky read his paper on "Our Credit System, Its Uses and Abuses," before the January meeting of the Florists' Club on New Year's evening.

Those who object to the prices of cut flowers at Christmas will do well to notice that the 6-inch pans of Saintpaulia ionantha, which brought $1 each before the holidays, can now be had for the sum of 50 cents each.

Wesley Clark is now with the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co.

The story that Eugene Weiss was seen in pursuit of the setting sun on Christmas eve with two boxes of fancy Maids under his arm is strenuously denied by Samuel Lilley.

John McIntyre is handling quantities of fine stevia. PHIL.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Flowers remain well cleaned up just now. It is a case of "everything going out and nothing coming in." Few Beauties are seen and other roses also are at a premium. Carnations are coming in more plentifully but remain cleaned up at prices ranging from $5 to $8 per hundred. The finest Enchantress ever seen are coming from Mount Clemens. Violets are also way up, both single and double. Valley brings from $3.50 to $4.50 per hundred and is in large demand. Stevia sells well. Narcissi and daffodils are used extensively.

Even though the holidays are over, plants are selling well. The high prices of cut flowers have created quite a sale of blooming plants for sick people.

Among the Craft.

Despite that all are glad the holiday rush is over for another year, were it not for these extra occasions life would seem rather dull.

Wm. Brown and his force put in some long hours. A large decoration in Strassburg's hall on Christmas eve added to his troubles.

J. F. Sullivan's window was prettily decorated, a snow effect of cotton-batting with a number of Christmas novelties. Sullivan does the violet business in this city and many thousand eastern violets were disposed of at good prices.

In 1905 E. A. Fetters was not able to say much about the holiday business, that being his first season in Detroit, but he has built up a good trade and is well satisfied with 1906 Christmas.

The Michigan Cut Flower Exchange has again passed through an unusually heavy siege. Under the careful management of Robert Rahaley, business is booming.

The Bemb Floral Co. was taxed to the limit. Albert Pochelon had just completed some changes in the store. This firm makes a specialty of prepared grasses, palm leaves, etc.

Breitmeyer's beautiful store was all aglow with red. They had a much larger cut from their houses than for several years, but everything went. Many tasteful baskets seen about the store before Christmas were all claimed by Santa Claus. Breitmeyer's also have had many orders for receptions and parties.

The Detroit Cut Flower Exchange reports an unusually satisfactory Christmas.

Taepke always closes the store and greenhouses the afternoon of December 26, giving all hands a chance to catch up sleep. An extra large cut of carnations, including about 1,000 red, helped them out. Mr. Taepke recently acquired the property occupied by the greenhouses and dwelling on Elmwood avenue.

Mrs. Allan P. Cox is highly elated over the holiday trade. This is her first Christmas in the business, but the rush was handled remarkably well.

The large number of plants seen at Schroeter's before the rush dwindled down to nothing. Ferns, palms, cyclamens, begonias, azaleas, etc., sold fast but a large lot of poinsettias went best. They also have had several good decorations.

Various Notes.

James Taylor and George Rackham have gone back to the good old way of heating, throwing out hot water under forced circulation.

Chas. Tuson, of Windsor, supplied the dealers with many roses, Beauties and fine valley.

This was a sad Christmas at the Detroit Floral Co. Mr. and Mrs. Flowerday's only daughter was hovering between life and death for several weeks, passing into the long sleep Christmas noon. Being the only daughter and just in her teens, with everything bright before her, made it all the more sad. Numerous floral tributes expressed the deepest sympathy from the many friends.

Ed. Beard suffered from a severe attack of la grippe but is again on his feet.

E. A. Fetters has sold out his business to Murray Paterson, who ran a flower stand at the Strand grocery store, which failed recently. H. S.

CLEVELAND.

Christmas Comment.

All things considered, trade and conditions at Christmas were quite satisfactory to all the leading florists. By the leading florists I mean those who put forth an extra effort to make Christmas the best ever, and succeeded. It means lots of hard work and early and late hours and some little grumbling, but now that it is all over we find ourselves in as good trim as ever and ready for the next rush of orders, which will come February 14, when the demand for violets and roses will take up everything in sight—providence and the weather permitting—as it does not want to be too cold on St. Valentine's day or it will freeze out all the love of little Cupid, and the violets for milady will remain on the shelf.

Christmas had several surprises for the store man, but the greatest shock came when notified that best stock in longest Beauties had advanced to $15 to $18 per dozen and selected red, white and pink roses to $25 per hundred. We in the provinces have not been accustomed to such high values and it was a hard matter to explain to a would-be purchaser the reason for the advance. These high prices at Christmas are a body blow to the occasional buyer of the great middle class, and the result is that instead of making a future customer out of this annual visitor for your own future good and profit, you drive him off with the thought that it is no use to try to buy flowers at any of the first-class stores.

Everything cleaned up well this year at good prices and there were only a few white carnations left over for the next day's crop of funerals. Carnations were extra fine and in great quantities the last few days. Prices for extra fine scarlet and Enchantress were high. Violets were especially good and sold well. Valley was much sought for and Paper Whites and Romans sold well because there was no advance in price. There were a few Trumpet major in the market. Poinsettias were poor this year and few pans of good stock to be seen. Begonias, azaleas and cyclamens took the lead as sellers, while some large pans of cypripediums done up in pea green and yellow trimmings sold out early in the day at a good profit.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

Christmas business was undoubtedly the heaviest that we have ever had and a general feeling of satisfaction is felt throughout the trade. The growers disposed of everything that was grown for Christmas trade and the retailers in turn were successful in turning it over at handsome profits.

Plants of poinsettias sold at sight and at good figures. Azaleas were somewhat of a disappointment to a great many. Cyclamens and poinsettias seem to have taken the lead over azaleas in sales and a small number of them were carried over by nearly all of the dealers.

Baskets of plants sold well. Some handsome arrangements were noted, which brought from $5 to $15 apiece. The demand for them appeared to be quite heavy and it was noticeable that when a handsome basket was shown it would sell in preference to cut flowers. Holly wreaths sold about the same as other seasons, the holly, however, was much better than that handled for a number of years.

The sale of cut flowers was a surprise to nearly all of the trade. Never before were there so many sold, notwithstanding the high prices.

St. Paul.

L. L. May & Co. report the heaviest city trade they have had in years. The run was strong on cut flowers. While a great many plants were sold, the sale on them did not exceed that of previous years.

Colberg & Lemke put up some handsome windows Christmas week. They report trade as being fully up to expectations, disposing of a large number of Elegantissima ferns at fancy prices. They report an especially good trade on cut flowers.

Holm & Olson's store was nicely decorated. They had large arches of holly in their immense windows and Christmas bells were hung in large numbers. They report a fine trade. Their stock of plants was good and sales heavy. Practically the only plants left were a few Begonia Gloire de Lorraine.

E. F. Lemke reports a satisfactory business, the demand being especially heavy on cut flowers.

C. F. Vogt reports the largest Christmas trade he ever had.

A. S. Swanson did a nice trade and obtained the best of prices for everything.

rated and trade, he says, was never better.

John Monson, of the Minneapolis Floral Co., sold everything, with the exception of a small number of cyclamens and primroses.

William Donaldson Co. put up some handsome windows. The cut at the greenhouses did not anywhere nearly supply them, and they were compelled to buy outside. They increased their force to eight clerks and all were kept busy.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The tradesmen in general have that tired look, which people who work day and night get, yet they do not complain as they get satisfying reports from the various stores, showing an increase of from twenty-five to fifty per cent over any other season, the plant end showing the largest increase.

The wholesale houses all report a good Christmas trade and cleaned up nicely in everything that came in, by Monday noon. Some of the stock which came in Monday night and Tuesday morning hung, but most of it cleaned up later in the week. New Year's was about as in any other year, this day as usual equaling a good Saturday.

Various Notes.

Randolph & McClements lost a wagon and load of decorative stock during the last cold snap. The stove set the wagon on fire and before it was noticed the whole top was in a blaze and everything ruined.

George A. McWilliams, of Natrona, Pa., has gone to North Carolina, where he will spend a couple of weeks on business and in hunting.

The tremendous rush at the express offices gave the wholesalers some trouble in getting their stock, although, with one or two exceptions, they got their outbound shipments off in good shape.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The weather conditions were unfavorable to producing as large a cut of flowers as was expected for Christmas. Everything was exceptionally scarce. There were, however, plenty of Romans, Paper Whites, violets and valley, with Cross having a few sweet peas on sale. The supply of good roses was far short of the demand; carnations the same. Everybody was well stocked with plants: azaleas, poinsettias, peppers, cyclamens and Romans in pans. In sales poinsettias led. It must also be said that they were in heaviest supply with all, except Cross, who had a run on cyclamens, being practically the only one having them. Crabb & Hunter were in the same position with Bon Silene roses, which are just now popular for bouquets. Every azalea and poinsettia sold to the last plant. Of other kinds, some were left. All flowers were cleaned up to the last scrap. The weather being cold, much difficulty was experienced in wrapping and delivering plants. As a whole business with most was about equal to that of last year, with Cross's store as an extra over last year, and he did a fair share of the total business done.

It is strange, but never, since violets began to be grown here, have they been as slow in blooming as this year, or as few cut during the holidays. James Schols is cutting the most.

The daily papers chronicle that Walter S. and Mary Parsons have started suit against Charles Chadwick to collect $2,000 alleged to be due on a note.

LILACS FOR FORCING.

So highly are the fragrant flowers of the lilacs appreciated when developed early in the year under glass, that in directing attention to the details essential to success in forcing these shrubs there is no occasion to dwell upon their charms.

To insure a full measure of success it is necessary to have plants that are well established in pots, have well-ripened wood, and are furnished with an abundance of stout flower buds. None but the finest of the numerous varieties should be grown for forcing.

October, or early in November, will be the best month in which to pot the lilacs, but whether the young plants have been raised at home or purchased, they ought not to be forced during the ensuing winter. Some may be sufficiently advanced to bloom, but it will be far better to give them a year's growth in pots before taking them under glass. Two years will be gained by buying plants of the ordinary nursery size and potting them up as advised for the home-grown stock. As they are potted, plunge the pots to the rim in a bed of ashes made up on a hard surface.

For their accommodation during the summer and autumn months a bed of ashes should be made up in an open, sunny position, and the pots plunged to two-thirds their depth in this. Sufficient space must be allowed them to make their growth without overcrowding. The watering must be carefully attended to, and arranged as here advised, with a portion only of the pots covered; they will require rather liberal supplies of water. When the pots are well filled with roots, and they are growing freely, an occasional supply of liquid manure will be beneficial. Bushes that are producing a considerable number of shoots should have some of the weaker ones removed to give room for the others to attain their full development.

Lilacs prepared as here advised may be forced quite early, and the first batch may be placed in heat early in December. Where the stock is small it will be better to commence a month later, namely, at the beginning of January. They will succeed under the conditions that usually obtain in the forcing house; but the best results are obtained by commencing with a temperature of 50 or 55 degrees and increasing it to 60 degrees as the growth progresses.

Careful attention must be given them after they have produced their flowers, unless it is intended to have a fresh stock every year. This would be so wasteful a practice that it ought not to be adopted, but instead the plants should be grown from year to year. Assuming that the latter course will be taken, it becomes necessary to point out that, as the growth will have been commenced under glass, the plants when they flower must be placed where they can complete their growth under similar conditions. A light, airy house will afford the most suitable quarters for them when completing their growth. A stout, short-jointed growth being the most favorable to flower production, the plants should be placed near the glass, and the ventilation so arranged that they will enjoy a free circulation of air about them. Whether fire-heat will be necessary or not will depend upon the period at which they bloom, but when they are flowered in March and April, very little, if any, will be required. Those, on the other hand, that are started so early that they bloom in January and February, will require some assistance from the heating apparatus. As an indication of the amount of artificial heat necessary, it may be mentioned that a temperature of 60 degrees is the most desirable. When making their new growth the plants should, if they have not been shifted into pots one size larger, be supplied with liquid manure alternately with plain water. Should the bushes be growing out of shape, or have become leggy, they should be pruned into shape or be cut rather hard back and encouraged by a rather higher temperature and overhead syringings to start quickly into growth. They may, if necessary, when new growth is commencing, be shifted into larger pots.

When the new growth is completed, and the completion is indicated by the buds, the plants should be gradually hardened off and be placed in a sunny position out of doors. Here the pots should be plunged to about two-thirds their depth in a bed of ashes made up on the surface. This is much better than plunging the pots to their full depth in a border of soil, as is sometimes done, as the water supply can be more carefully regulated and the risk of the soil becoming water-logged is avoided. As a matter of course these must be watered with the same care as advised for the young plants when being prepared, and occasional supplies of liquid manure be given throughout the summer. At every third or fourth watering liquid manure may be given.

There are now so many beautiful varieties in cultivation that the cultivator has a wide range for selection, but as they are not all equally suitable for flowering in pots, considerable care is necessary. The following are all suitable for forcing: Madame Lemoine, Frau B. Damman, and Marie Legraye, of the white varieties; Michael Buchner, Grand Duke Constantine, and President Carnot, of those having flowers of various shades of lilac; Alphonse Lavallee and President Grevy, of the blue lilac shade; Charles Joly and Souv. de Louis Späth are two fine purple varieties. —Gardeners' Magazine.

PACKING VEGETABLE PLANTS.

I note several inquiries, with interesting answers, and often note you speak of stock as being well packed, how necessary it is that it be well packed, etc. As many readers would undoubtedly order more than they do were they sure of receiving stock that had been well packed to stand 100 to 1,000 miles of express travel, will you kindly state how best to pack live plants, tomato, cabbage, cauliflower, celery, strawberries, etc.?

F. M. P.

Packing is purely a matter of experience. I know of no school for packers. I must say that in the great majority of cases we receive plants of all kinds most admirably packed at all seasons. The larger the firm, the better they pack, because they have experienced men who are constantly employed at the job.

The season has much to do with the question. If packed too tightly such seedlings as tomato, cabbage, cauliflower, celery, etc., would heat. I would say for these seedlings that they should be sorted into lots of twenty-five in a parcel. The roots should be about even and laid on a piece of paper large enough to go twice around the bundle of plants and projecting five or six inches beyond the roots. If the shipment were destined to go 1,000 miles you should scatter a little damp sphagnum moss on the paper before you laid the plants on it; then when the paper is wrapped around the plants the moss would be in touch with the roots. Wrap the paper around the plants and when once around fold in the paper that projected beyond the roots and you have a tight little parcel which will not unfold in transit.

In summer-time, or before danger of frost, these bunches of twenty-five plants can be stood upright in a shallow box and on the top of the box a few slats nailed. If the weather is cold the bundles of plants can be laid flat in a box in four or five layers and the cover nailed down tight. Between each layer of bundles you should have at least two layers of newspapers or perhaps better still an inch of excelsior, this to prevent heating.

In the case of strawberries and tomatoes, perhaps twelve plants will be enough in each bunch. In the closed box always have the box firmly filled, with no chance for the bundle of plants to shift, for when the box is closed on all sides expressmen cannot be expected to know on which side the box should lie. We have received 2,000 or more small lettuce plants with not a plant dead or bruised after a journey of 500 miles. Then again we have received a few hundred pansies which were so mixed up with the soil that we had to run the whole mass through a coarse sieve to separate the plants from the soil.

FARTHEST NORTH.

The firm of Ashworth & Holmes has established the Saskatoon Nurseries, at Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada, said to be the farthert north of any greenhouse plant in Canada. The nurseries will be under the management of Arthur Marriott, who for the last two years has made a distinct success of growing early vegetables, flowers, etc., under the limited glass at his disposal. There will be 10,000 square feet of glass in the Saskatoon Nurseries to start with and in addition to this there will be put down forty acres in nursery trees, including maple, poplar, birch and all kinds suitable for this country. The new concern expects to be able to supply Saskatoon at least with early cucumbers, tomatoes, celery, lettuce and other vegetables, as well as all lines of cut flowers, pot plants and bedding flowers.

Excavation has been made for the hotbeds and the manager's house is well under way. The glass-covered portion will be walled in with concrete walls five feet high, four feet of which will be below the ground level. The iron-frame roofing has been ordered and shipped from the King Construction Co. and also the Kroeschell boiler, from Chicago. The boiler is capable of supplying heat for 10,000 feet of 4-inch pipe.

The promoters of the concern are confident that a big field awaits an industry of this kind and nothing will be left undone to develop business. The manager's house will adjoin the glass houses at the north and a doorway will allow passage from one to the other without going outside.

GREENWICH, CONN.—Hitchings & Co. are building a fine range of fruit houses at Conyers Manor, where Henry Wild, late of Brookline, Mass., is superintendent. An immense amount of planting had been recently done on this fine estate.

FAIRHAVEN, MASS.—Peter Murray did a big Christmas trade in pot plants. He had a grand lot of Lorraine begonias. His Winsor carnation proved extremely popular with the public. Orders continue to come in almost daily for this fine new carnation.

BROCKTON, MASS.—W. W. Hathaway, the well-known Main street florist, had the best Christmas trade on record. Poinsettias, azaleas, Lorraine begonias and other well-flowered plants met with a fine sale. Roses, carnations, valley, violets, poinsettias and other seasonable flowers all sold well, while the demand for holly and other greenery was better than ever.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

TEXAS truckers are now an important factor in the mail order seed trade.

"Seeds Which Succeed" is the inscription on the envelope which brings the catalogue of the D. Landreth Seed Co.

VISITED CHICAGO: C. R. Root, manager of the Denver branch of the Barteldes Seed Co.; A. B. Agnew, of the Pacific Seed Growers' Co., San Francisco.

THE early catalogues are bringing a rather better response than usual. Buyers seem to understand the shortage in certain lines and are ordering early to be sure of getting what they want.

WITH few exceptions vine seed crops will be delivered in full, according to latest reports. Sweet corn also will be sufficient for all needs. Rocky Ford, Colo., evidently has a full crop of melon seed of the ordinary strains and what are termed the "specials" are offered freely.

ONION set prices are higher now than they were at this time last year, and the outlook for the coming spring is for higher prices than have ruled for several years. As an indication of what may be expected later on, present values may be mentioned as follows: Red and yellow, $2 per bushel; white, $2.75. These prices are for spring shipment on orders given now.

THE seed advertising in the January magazines is lighter than a year ago. Seedsmen who study advertising have found that "the direct command," the advertising psychologists' latest hobby, when put in the form "Send for my seed catalogue!" is more likely to be obeyed by people who want the pretty pictures to amuse the children with, than it is by those who buy seeds.

PETUNIA Rheingold belongs to the superbissima class of large-flowering petunias. The widely opened, clear, bright, golden-yellow throat is untarnished by the usual net of dark veins, and with the pure white margin a marvelous effect is produced, much superior to the old, pale-yellow forms marked with dark veins. It is one of the season's novelties of David Sachs, Quedlinburg, Germany.

THE Globe varieties of onion seed received as being crop of 1906 fall below the standard as to germination, but the flat sorts from the same sources test well. It is upon the retailer that the burden of a poor test of seed usually falls. A grower may explain how it happens that his seed does not test well and satisfy the retailer that he tells the truth, but the retailer is up against a different proposition when he tries to explain it to the consumer.

THE seedsmen who depend wholly upon their catalogues to bring them business, and to whom a correct printed price within said catalogue is of the utmost importance, have had a hard row to hoe to get their books out on time. Many of them have been holding back expecting to get fuller deliveries from the onion seed growers, and the lack of definite information from the growers upon whom they have been depending has engendered bad feeling in many cases, and has demoralized things considerably.

THE onion seed prices in the retail catalogues so far noted seem to be up to the full limit of the ordinary buyer's idea of what he can afford to pay, and in some cases higher than he will buy at. As an offset to this, the wax bean prices are again down to the market gardener's idea of what they are worth to him as a planting investment, while the turnips, beets and radishes, which might stand an advance, are little if any higher than in ordinary years.

THE shortage of onion bulbs for planting with the California growers is becoming serious. Red Wethersfield seems to be shorter than any other variety and some of the growers are making efforts to secure bulbs from outside sources, but without much success. This and other drawbacks will be likely to make the California onion seed product of 1907 shorter even than 1906.

THE question of seed for the flat varieties of onion usually sown for sets is still agitating the minds of those who buy it in quantities. The fact that a large quantity of seed that is of doubtful pedigree is available at a low price does not help matters. Growers are afraid to take hold of this seed, but are endeavoring to beat down the price of the proper article on account of it.

SEED growers from the Pacific coast making business trips in the east so far recorded at our office this season are A. B. Agnew, of the Pacific Seed Growers' Co., San Francisco; F. H. Routzahn, of the Routzahn Seed Co., Arroyo Grande, Cal.; Charles Kimberlin, of the J. M. Kimderlin Seed Co., Santa Clara, Cal.; E. H. Morrison, Fairfield, Wash. It is reported that others may conclude to come later on.

MAIL ORDER SEED TRADE.

J. F. Noll & Co., Newark, N. J., write as follows under date of December 27, 1906:

"For some time the writer has been seeing comment by the various seed houses on catalogue covers, the use of premiums, etc., to draw trade. Under separate cover, by even mail, we forward you a copy of our general catalogue for 1907 and also a copy of our booklet, "Why." We think we have a pretty good article in the way of a catalogue, for the class of trade for which it is intended. We have never, at any time in the history of our business, made a practice of offering $1 worth of seeds for 40 cents; neither have we ever offered the privilege of selecting $1.25 worth, or perhaps more, for $1. Our prices are plainly carried out and we have found this by far the best means of handling the trade.

"We have made quality the first consideration and we think our customers appreciate this, for the reason that we have gathered together the most critical gardeners into our list of buyers, from Florida to Boston. We have, however, for our mail order trade, tried the booklet this year for the first time. It is our intention, if it makes good, to use a series of booklets as a follow-up. It occurs to us that the booklet has been used with unvarying success in other businesses and we are, at present, having excellent returns from its use. It is only intended as a means of establishing interest and gathering new names, which it is accomplishing to our entire satisfaction. We would like your comment on the idea, and would appreciate any additional ideas you may furnish us."

The booklet is neatly printed, sixteen pages and cover. It aims to interest the farmer and gardener by contrasting the life of "nature's nobleman," as the poets call him, with the actualities experienced by the writer, and goes on to tell the story of "Noll's special strains." As a means of reaching new people it is good, for it may be sent out for not over 2 cents a copy, postage included, and none but planters are likely to fill in the return card enclosed, asking for the much more expensive general catalogue of eighty-four pages and 184 illustrations, printed on heavy, supercalendered paper.

It is interesting to note that in the Noll catalogue Red Globe and Yellow Globe onions are priced at $2 per pound (Yellow is $2.25 on another page) White Globe at $2.50; Scarlet Turnip White Tipped radish, 40 cents per pound; Alaska pea, $3.50 per bushel; Davis Perfection cucumber, $1.50 per pound; Wardwell's and Davis' beans, $5.50 per bushel.

WILSON PROPOSES REMEDY.

Secretary Wilson, of the Department of Agriculture, has a plan which would put an end to the free seeds. The plan proposed contemplates the introduction and breeding of new plants and fruits and the extension of the growing of others in climates suited to them. This is being done on a small scale, but as an example of what the department wants to do take the corn crop. It is proposed to improve corn by simply breeding and selecting a grain adapted to different climatic and soil conditions throughout the country. The work would be applicable in large part to all portions of the United States.

From seventy-three to seventy-five projects have been developed and these and many others will be submitted to congress. There is the question of increasing the production of beet sugar. Practically all seed for this plant now comes from abroad. Preliminary experiments and tests indicate we can grow as good or better seed in this country. It is intended, if congress gives permission, to produce and distribute commercial sugar beet seed with the primary object of developing a new American industry.

Secretary Wilson does not believe the present free seed distribution should continue because he regards it as a waste of public money. Undoubtedly when the question of inclusion of another appropriation for free seed, similar to that in past appropriation bills, is taken up by the house agricultural committee it will be rejected. This was done last year, but the free-seeders were strong enough to induce the house to authorize the appropriation. Whether they are so strong this year remains to be seen.

GRADING SEED CORN.

A perfect stand is one of the principal factors in securing a good yield. If three or four stalks per hill is a perfect stand, hills with one or two or with five or six stalks will make a poor stand and give a loss in yield. It is important to have good seed of perfect germination, and to have the seed grains dropped uniformly, with the right number in the hill. It is thus desirable, as emphasized by Prof. P. G. Holden, of the Iowa Agricultural College, to separate the seed ears selected into three classes, or grades, having small, intermediate, and large kernels, and shell and preserve these three grades of seed separately. Before beginning the planting, the planter can be carefully tested with each grade of seed, and the dropping plates with different-sized holes or marginal notches selected for each grade, which by careful trial are found to uniformly drop the desired number of kernels. These plates, after thorough test, can be marked, and used when needed with the proper size of seed grains without loss of time in the rush of planting.

TOLEDO GRASS SEED MARKET.

Toledo, the greatest clover seed mart in the world, is now obliged to buy large quantities of the seed in foreign markets. This unusual condition is occasioned by the shortage in the crops this year in this country. March seed is being purchased at $8.40 a bushel, or about 14 cents a pound, but this price, Toledo dealers say, is not in excess of what has been paid in this country.

Toledo dealers are buying quantities of clover seed in English, German and Italian markets, because the stock cannot be secured in America. Toledo dealers are interested in the law concerning the importation of clover seed which, after January 1, makes it mandatory that samples of all foreign seed be first submitted to the United States Department of Agriculture.

CARE OF SEED CORN.

"It is advisable that all corn which is to be used as seed—for the breeding plat, for general planting, or for sale—should be preserved in the best manner possible," says C. P. Hartley, in a recent bulletin of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. "Good care consists in carefully drying the ears, and at the same time seeing that they dry quite rapidly. This should be done as soon as they are gathered, and they should then be stored in a dry place of even temperature and where they will not be reached by damp air. Seed corn, although it may have become very dry, will absorb moisture if it comes in contact with a damp atmosphere. When first gathered, seed corn often contains twenty to twenty-five per cent of moisture, and may be greatly injured in one day's time if allowed to freeze or to heat."

BULBS OF GUERNSEY.

I noticed some remarks in a recent issue relative to Guernsey-grown bulbs in comparison with Dutch. In my experience Guernsey-grown bulbs are suitable for two or three definite purposes, and for those purposes no finer bulbs can be obtained. Selected stocks grown in the Channel Islands for forcing for very early work are a week or so in front of Dutch given the same treatment. This is no doubt accounted for by the advantage they have in early ripening. Probably when they are lifted and warehoused the fields in Holland are still green and full of growth. Before a bulb can be forced it requires a certain amount of rest and if by climatic or other influences it can be induced to go to rest earlier so much earlier will it force. A plain example is seen of this in Roman hyacinths; the further south they are grown the earlier will they bloom, and again, if an early ripening season occurs in Holland through hot, dry weather the Dutch bulbs always force earlier. The Guernsey bulbs are also fine for a grower who wishes to plant a large quantity outside for stock purposes, for rapidly obtaining a large number of bulbs and for producing a large quantity of bloom for market.

RAWSON'S NEWPORT BEAUTY STOCK

is the earliest, largest and most exquisite colored stock for winter forcing that has ever been introduced. Habit, foliage and color of flowers are entirely distinct from any other strain. The highest praise has been bestowed upon it by those who grew it this past season.

If wanted for Easter, seed should be sown in December. The above strain produces 90 per cent double flowers, the highest percentage of any strain. The following varieties:

Marguerite, pure white.....1-32 oz., 75c
Paust, most exquisite pink.....1-32 oz., 75c
Valentine, delicate lavender.....1-32 oz., 75c
Mephistopheles, fiery red.....1-32 oz., 75c

TAUNTON, MASS. — Taunton Greenhouses report a first-class Christmas trade, every salable plant being disposed of, such as azaleas, primulas, cyclamens, poinsettias, etc., and many foliage plants. Among the latter Nephrolepis Whitmani sold finely. Flowers sold well, carnations, violets and roses being favorites in order named. Trade since Christmas has continued good.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Current Comment.

Christmas has come and gone and in its passing has left a record for business. All the store men commenced early and stayed late, and still the demand was not satisfied and could not be, as the supply was exhausted. Carnations, roses and poinsettias were most in demand. Some bulb stuff was to be had, also violets and sweet peas, but they did not go far. Plants sold well, Lorraine begonia still being the favorite. With such a demand prices had to be good. Cloudy weather is still the order of the day.

At the meeting of the State Florists' Association of Indiana F. Harritt, F. Hukreide and H. Schilling were appointed a committee to take charge of and arrange all flowers for exhibit in connection with the annual meeting January 8. This meeting will be held at the Commercial club, rooms having been secured for the purpose and it is hoped a large attendance will be on hand.

The city council is about to reduce the number of employees engaged at the various parks. The park superintendent's salary got a substantial cut not long ago and now the force will get it where the chicken got the axe. A little jealousy is the main cause for all this economy.

Some of the local growers are going in for summer roses this coming year.

S.

STAMFORD, CONN.

Some extra fine seedling carnations are to be seen at the greenhouses of Oliver Hoyt. A fine pink, between Lawson and Prosperity, long stem and a red, said to be much better than Craig and as large as Enchantress, are among the best. There are also some fine white and crimson seedlings. This is the second year for these seedlings and he now has about twenty-five plants of each of these varieties. William Stack is the gardener.

MABELLE

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. Delivery January 5 to 10 and later. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Chrysanthemum

By Arthur Herrington

Formerly president Chrysanthemum Society of America.

The most complete and comprehensive work on the cultivation of the chrysanthemum that has yet been published in America. Its scope and character may be gleaned from the list of contents, which comprises chapters on composts; planting; benches, boxes or pots; general cultural details; crown and terminal buds; feeding, its object and application; care of the buds; exhibition and judging; specimen plants, plants in pots; raising from seed and hybridizing; sports; hardy chrysanthemums; chrysanthemums for south and west; insect pests and diseases; classification and selection of varieties for special purposes; history of the chrysanthemum, etc. The book will be welcomed for the lucid, comprehensive, as well as the practical character of its contents. Handsomely illustrated. 168 pages, 5x7 inches. Price 50c postpaid.

I THINK the REVIEW is O. K. I have got so interested in it that I keep watching for the mail man every Saturday.—T. J. ALLEN, Lewiston, Me.

MORRISTOWN, PA.—Robert Hull had several hundred dollars' worth of plants destroyed by the cold on the night of December 12, owing to the breaking down of his heating plant.

WINNIPEG, MAN.—The Winnipeg Floral Co. was fortunate enough to secure, for the holiday week, the place formerly occupied by the Imperial Dry Goods Co. This enabled them to handle the holiday trade to better advantage than they could do at their regular store on Portage avenue. They had a fine display of flowering plants and cut blooms at both establishments.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN JOSE, CAL.—The Ruehl-Wheeler Nursery Co. has been granted a permit to build a greenhouse.

THE supervisors of Yuba county, Cal., recently passed an ordinance that no grape vines could be imported into Yuba county unless the shipper showed a certificate from the state horticultural commission to the effect that there had been no phylloxera or anaheim disease in the county from which the vines were shipped during the last five years. But the state commission has no means of knowing, and hence cannot certify—and there you are.

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

The Marin County Horticultural Society was organized December 19, in accordance with the decision of a convention, held December 5. The following officers were elected: John L. Jack, president; J. Hetherington, vice-president; Thomas P. Redmayne, secretary; Richard Lohrman, treasurer.

Meetings will be held every first and third Wednesday of each month in San Rafael, at Peterson's hall, B street, near Second street. Visiting members of the craft are cordially invited to attend. As a majority of those actively engaged in horticulture, in Marin county, are already enrolled, and others have signified a willingness to coöperate, there is no doubt as to a successful future.

If sufficient interest is shown by the public to warrant it, the society will, no doubt, hold an exhibit during the coming year that will do credit to this little garden spot.

THOMAS P. REDMAYNE, Sec'y.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Christmas has come and gone and we are within a couple of days of the new year. We have hardly yet had sufficient time to tell how good business really was, but on all sides I have had assurances that it was the best holiday enjoyed in several years. The weather up to Monday afternoon was all that could be desired, although both on Christmas eve and morning there were light showers, but not of sufficient quantity to interfere to any extent with business.

It is hard to tell what was most in demand. Owing to warm weather there was an abundance of flowers of all kinds, including violets. Good mums were in shorter supply than anything else and big prices were paid by the retailers for ordinary stock.

Carnations cost the stores from $4 to $10 per hundred and were retailed at about double these prices at most of the stores. Roses were in fair supply and of good quality and the growers charged for Brides, Maids and Liberty from 75 cents to $2 per dozen. Beauties sold well at from $3 to $5 per dozen wholesale.

Valley was plentiful and good. Roman hyacinths were seen less than usual and were not in special demand. Poinsettias were eagerly bought up and proved to be one of the most rapid sellers of the season. There was a shortage of them, especially of the cut stems.

Violets held out well; $2 per dozen bunches was the ruling price and from 25 cents to 50 cents was obtained per bunch by the retailers. The indications for a continuance of trade are good.

Various Notes.

Over in Oakland big Christmas business was the order of the days preceding it, and all the dealers were well satisfied.

James Skinner, after disposing of three carloads of Christmas trees, has left on a trip to Oregon and Washington.

Domoto Bros. had one of the largest stocks of valley to cut for the holidays; $4 per hundred was the price obtained by this firm.

The Holland Nursery Co. had a big cut of carnations of splendid quality. Enchantress is a specialty at this place.

The California Evergreen Co. handled about ten tons of California red berries in addition to several carloads of various greens.

The Sievers Floral Co. reports a heavy demand for extra long-stemmed Beauties. Their show-windows are one of the sights of the town.

Ferrari Bros. were in line with a fine lot of Bridesmaids and Brides.

William M. Bowen, formerly of Los Angeles, is now located at 2221 Telegraph avenue, Berkeley.

N. Rolleri has gone on a two weeks' trip to southern California.

Charles Bridges has returned from a month's visit to Portland, Oregon.

Douglass Fraser, formerly of Vallejo, California, expects to enter the floral arena in Oakland. G.

CHRISTMAS PLANTS AT FRISCO.

There is considerable change in the demand for the various kinds of potplants from year to year and it is especially noticeable during the Christmas holidays. The greatest call this season was for poinsettias in the shape of growing plants either planted separately or in pans containing from three to five plants. Valley was also a good seller and Erfordi begonias have lost none of their popularity. With ferns and palms, although there were many disposed of, it was evident from the queries of the customers that their ideas ran more to showier combinations.

Several seasons ago camellias and azaleas in bloom were eagerly sought after, but they were not much in evidence this season and the retailers had but few calls for them. Heaths and ardisias, both of which have formerly been much sought after, were given but little attention. Roman hyacinths in pots sold fairly well, but not so good as formerly. Chinese primulas were not exhibited in anything like the quantity seen in other years and they attracted but little attention.

The poinsettia was by far the most sought for flower, and, although there was a great scarcity of them down south, owing to the cold snap, they were displayed in good quantities by most of the dealers and were eagerly bought at good prices.

Adiantum and Asparagus plumosus in 6-inch and 7-inch pots sold well. The Boston ferns did not quite keep up their record of former years, although many fine specimen baskets and pots were shown by the stores.

There was little demand for any variety of palm except the kentia. This appears to be the old standby and has apparently superseded all the other palms. I refer here to the latania, cocos and Corypha Australis.

Asparagus Sprengeri, both in baskets and pots, when the specimens were extra good, sold good. Jerusalem cherries did not appear to interest many buyers.

Red bells and red immortelle wreaths did not sell as well as last season. The department stores carry them now and they have reduced the prices so low that there is little money to be made in such material by the ordinary florist.

With green stuff the demand was heavy. Much English holly was sent to San Francisco from British Columbia, and, despite the fact that the stores were compelled to pay $18 per small barrel for it and that it lasted but a short time, when removed from the barrels, it sold well.

But little eastern holly was seen here this year. It is not in favor with the customers apparently.

Red berries, mistletoe and huckleberry had an unprecedented sale and many dealers made more money out of their green goods than from any other source.

Garlands and festooning, also not made by florists generally, had a prominent place in the window decorations around town. G.

OAKS, N. D.—D. C. Walter has sold out his greenhouse business and has gone to Prescott, Ariz.

PORT FERRIS, N. Y.—Frank Lamereaux was robbed, December 20, while on a train from New York city, of overcoat, rubbers and a book. A woman is believed to have been the thief.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Christmas business was good and a great many stores afterwards looked as though a cyclone had struck them. Christmas day was the coldest we have had for thirty-five years and great difficulty was experienced in making deliveries.

Carnations were scarce and, in fact, all kinds of cut blooms were short. Bulbs of all kinds were used to good advantage and everything in the shape of a flower was salable. Greens of all kinds were cleaned up. There was a steady demand for plants and large numbers were sent as presents. Thousands of various kinds of yarding were used for decorations. The retail stores never looked more like a paradise, and no one is making any complaints as to the lack of business. With all this happiness, there was considerable funeral work disposed of.

Various Notes.

W. Christie, of Waverly, has opened an attractive store at Gay and Eden streets and will be in the neighborhood of George E. Personett.

W. Moore, gardener for H. Hurst, Woodbrook, Md., has completed two new houses 20x47 feet each.

J. J. Cummings, on West Baltimore street, is still displaying some extra fine poinsettias.

Albert G. Fiedler & Co. report that they had as much business as they could handle this Christmas, and every year there has been a steady increase over the last.

Robert Halliday was presented, Christmas week, with a bouncing baby girl.

J. C. Reinecke, gardener for Norman James, is cutting some extra fine Gates, Brides and Maids. He has one of the finest kept houses in that section.

L. Lancaster had a fine Christmas business in the suburbs. J. L. T.

NEW ORLEANS.

After a little spell of cold we are again enjoying spring weather and business is quite brisk. Several balls, the opening of a new theater and funeral work have kept some florists busy. At the funeral, a few days ago, of a prominent cotton merchant more than 150 floral offerings were presented.

A few years ago the custom of decorating with plants and flowers at Christmas, as is done in the northern states, was hardly noticeable in New Orleans, where most of the population originated from the Latin race, which does not observe Christmas day as much as the Anglo Saxons. But everything is changed now and this Christmas was a record-breaker. Never before was such a quantity of holly sold. Some came from Delaware, some from Alabama, some from the pine woods around New Orleans. The best came from Alabama. For several blocks Canal street was lined with stands with wreaths and everyone sold out. Christmas trees were short. One or two days before December 25 the scarcity was felt in the market and every dealer had to run to the woods and cut any piece of green, which was sold at a good price.

The high price of northern flowers prevented a few from buying, but a fair supply of our home flowers, which had been protected by an exceptionally mild season, gave a chance to almost everybody to have a few flowers. No doubt, every florist must be satisfied and have in mind that another Christmas day must find them well supplied with good stock. M. M. L.

RIVERSIDE, ILL.—The firm of Schmidt & Mayer, otherwise known as the Riverside Floral Co., dissolved partnership, by mutual consent, December 19, 1906. Anton J. Schmidt, on retiring from the firm, immediately assumed control of his new range of greenhouses in Riverside.

LEWISTON, ME.—T. J. Allen reports an excellent Christmas trade, both cut flowers and plants being in strong demand. More flowers could have been sold but for the high prices prevailing, $8 being asked for very moderate carnations in Boston commission houses. Landscape work continues to increase, but competent men to assist in this branch are hard to find. Another greenhouse will be added during the coming season.

BREEDING AND POMOLOGY.

The Maine Agricultural Experiment Station is just sending out Bulletin No. 132, "Plant Breeding in its Relation to American Pomology." As noted in this bulletin, the whole question of plant and animal breeding is in a state of transition. The first step in the improvement of American fruits was a crude selection of chance seedlings, wherever found, and it is a notable fact that many of the best known fruits of today were accidental seedlings or chance discoveries of valuable wild forms.

Cross fertilization as a means of improving plants has been generally employed only a little more than half a century, but this has now become of special importance as a means of combining the good qualities of different types.

Among the problems which demand attention at the present time is the production of disease-resistant qualities in fruits; and this study is being vigorously pushed by the Department of Agriculture. The question of the mutual influence of scion and stock has long been under discussion, but little accurate work has been done toward solving the problem. The influence of certain chemicals upon the color, composition and other characteristics of fruits are of perennial interest and this study is being conducted at the Maine Agricultural Experiment Station. The existence of graft hybrids is freely maintained, but the principles involved have been little studied. The individuality of fruit trees is frequently suggested, but few data bearing upon the point are available. These and many other problems, fundamental and far reaching in their importance, are presented to the student of plant development. It is to this class of problems, more scientific but not less practical in their nature than those usually taken up in pomological discussions, that the systematic breeder of American fruits is turning at the present time.

RUDBECKIA MAXIMA.

One of the grandest plants of the autumn season is Rudbeckia maxima, a stately plant which baffles many who attempt its cultivation, and, on the other hand, thrives apart when in the right position. The rough and ready methods of cultivation generally satisfactory with most rudbeckias must find no place in the treatment of R. maxima. It requires, and is worthy of, special treatment. It will not thrive in wet soils, preferring a deep, light loam, and one must wait for two years after removal before the plant will show its proper character. It grows to a height of two or three yards, and has broad, glaucous leaves in loose tufts, handsomer than those of the best funkia, and is a welcome bit of bold foliage all the summer long. The yellow flowers are not very regular, generally lacking a petal or two of their full complement, but they are finely colored, and the huge black cones that occupy the centers project two inches, and are very striking.

One might examine every part of the plant, and consider they all lacked some measure of what florists call "finish," but there can be no question of their great value in the plant border. I should not hesitate to group it in a large bed for its stately grandeur, in gardens where it thrives in the plant border, but I would test it fully there first. It is not particular as to the quality of the soil provided it is planted a little above the general level. Droughts cannot harm it, for the roots reach incredible depths; but cold, rain-saturated soil in winter will cripple it as nothing else can. Spurious forms are in cultivation, but are readily distinguished by having greenish foliage and uncommon vigor.—Gardeners' Magazine.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

It is not often the general public has an opportunity to subscribe to a purely horticultural venture, but in one of the latest prospectuses the public is invited, through the Daily Mail, to subscribe £40,000 to the British Orchid & Nursery Co., Ltd. This company, with a capital of £50,000, is taking over the well-known high-class orchid importing and growing business of John Cowan & Co. of the Gateacre nurseries, near Liverpool. There is no doubt that orchid cultivation is annually growing with rapid strides and bids fair to become more popular, especially among the middle class or prosperous business people. The company, with the three of the Cowan family as directors and managers, should be successful in dividend earning, as these gentlemen have been well known for many years to be orchid experts, whether in growing, collecting or importing.

Each year brings results of fresh experiments, more or less successful, in retarded plants and bulbs. We have now quite a catalogue of these out-of-season growths. In addition to the well-known lily of the valley and Japan liliums, we have spiræas, lilacs, Azalea mollis, dielytra and others. It can hardly be said that the retarding of these is a commercial success, not that they cannot be flowered at the other end of their natural season with perfect success, as some fine exhibits of Azalea mollis in grandly flowered specimens at the November meeting of the Royal Horticultural Society has shown. But from a commercial standpoint the cost of retarding erect, bulky subjects, compared with the amount realized when bloomed, is altogether a losing business. Spiræas, for instance, were tried for the London markets in big quantities. But the price realized was disappointing, with the result that most growers who handle retarded stuff are again confining themselves to the less bulky and more profitable lily of the valley and Japan liliums.

The black currant mite may be said to have practically destroyed the growth of this valuable fruit in the United Kingdom. Many acres have been dug up and burned after the grower had cultivated them for five or six years, with the hope of eventually gaining the mastery of the pest. B. J.

FLORISTS' REVIEW

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y.

The regular meeting of the Dobbs Ferry Horticultural Association was held in its room in Odd Fellows' hall, Saturday evening, December 21, President Dunbar in the chair. The business of the evening was the election of officers for the ensuing year. Joseph Dunbar was reëlected president, R. Boreham, vice-president, H. Kestberg, secretary, C. Wilson, treasurer, and J. Bradley, corresponding secretary.

H. Kestberg was presented with $25 in gold as a token of appreciation of his work for the society. Mr. Kestberg was taken by surprise and replied to Mr. Dunbar, who made the presentation, in a feeling manner. He is held in high esteem by the association and Joseph Dunbar is liked so much that no man would allow himself to be a candidate against him.

Refreshments were served and a pleasant evening was spent. There was a prize for the best bunch of carnations in variety, which was awarded to J. Bradley; H. Kestberg, second. James Scott, of Tarrytown, and Claud Wilson were the judges. There is a prize for the best bunch of fifty double violets, to be competed for at our next meeting.

J. Bradley, Sec'y.

SALEM, VA.

Current Comment.

Christmas week was quite a busy time here. There was a fair supply of good stock, both of roses and carnations, and the growers are thankful they had enough to supply their customers. The demand for flowering plants, such as cyclamens and primroses, was good and seems to be on the increase.

The prices for roses were at retail, for fancy, $2.50 per dozen and $1.50 to $2 for ordinary. Carnations brought $1.75 per dozen for select stock and $1 for No. 1. The demand for green stuff was about equal to the supply.

Mr. Curran, of the Salem Nurseries, reports a good trade and expresses himself as pleased with his first Christmas here.

The weather, up till Sunday, was mild; then the thermometer dropped to 20 degrees with a high wind, which made safe delivery difficult. R.

Norristown, Pa.—Owing to the breaking down of his heating plant, Robert Hull had several hundred dollars' worth of plants destroyed by the cold on the night of December 24.

Portsmouth, O.—The Herms Floral Co. suffered the loss of the bulk of its cut flowers a night or two before Christmas, on account of the cold snap. The gas proved inadequate to heat the store and on the same night the pump at the greenhouse broke down, cutting off the hot water supply.

NEWPORT.

Christmas Comment.

Until quite recently the greater number of the florists of Newport have paid little attention to the plant department of their business, either at Christmas or Easter, excepting, of course, that they all had a fair supply of lilies for Easter. If they happened to have an assortment of plants of their own raising in condition for Christmas sales, well and good; if not, little effort was made to procure them. I think that having settled down firmly to get along in this way they got themselves to believe there was no market here for plants at Christmas, or if there was, it was not important enough to arouse them to work for it. Now, however, when some one brings plants here, such as are offered in other cities, we see the plant trade at Christmas rivaling the cut flower trade.

But few of the plants offered were grown in Newport, and we have always heard, until lately, that it would not pay to grow plants here. I don't believe it did pay to grow the kind of stuff that was offered here in the past, but I think it would pay to grow the kind of stock seen in one or two stores this Christmas.

The weather for several days before Christmas was not what dealers or buyers would have had if they had the power to make it, but Monday was pretty nearly right for all parties. There was not frost enough to make heavy wrapping necessary, and this was quite a consideration, especially to F. L. Ziegler, who, despite the employment of a number of extra men, had all he could do filling counter orders. Other florists were also busy.

Lorraine begonias went like hot cakes in front of a hungry hod carrier. Poinsettias were second in demand, although they were not extra good. Cyclamen were good and sold quickly. So did ardisias, araucarias, primulas, azaleas and solanums. Palms were not looked at much, neither were ferns.

Cut flowers sold in larger quantity than last year, at higher prices. Carnations brought from $1 per dozen up. Roses, excepting Beauties, $1.50 and up. Beauties were scarce. Violets were received in greater abundance than expectations warranted. They were good quality and met with a ready sale. There were some good Harrisii lilies offered at $2 to $3 per dozen.

This was the first occasion when much consideration was given to small spruce trees in pots, but they went all right. Every one seemed to have gotten fully supplied with holly, but there was nothing like the glut of last year; on the contrary, a good price was maintained. The same may be said of trees, of which a scarcity was feared a week before Christmas, but they got here in numbers to fit the demands to a nicety.

DENVER.

The Market.

The Christmas trade was better than in previous years, most retailers reporting from ten to twenty-five per cent increase over last year, the stock averaging good. Prices were higher and held firm to the end. Very little unexpected stock came in, to cause a slump. The weather was ideal, not only on Christmas day but for several days previous. Just to show what a fine climate Denver has, there was a band concert in the City park, where one could sit on the benches without heavy wraps and enjoy the music.

There was, of course, a decided scarcity in red flowers of all kinds. The fancy grades of carnations were $8 per hundred and retailed readily at $2 and $2.50 per dozen; none were less than $4 wholesale.

Beauties sold well and the supply was not heavy. The large stores sold out early at $20 per dozen. Brides and Maids also sold well, Maids being most called for, as well as Chatenay. The violet market was strong, quality good, the wholesale price $2 per hundred and the retail $4. Only one store had orchids and they sold well.

The quantity of flowering plants sold was enormous, and to these must be added a moderate number of palms and ferns. Azaleas were almost as popular as at Easter and sold well. Lorraine begonias were fine and perhaps more of these were sold than of any other plant. Cyclamens were also in good demand, but as a rule no one had what might be called first-class stock. Poinsettias sold well, both cut and in growing form. Nice pans of these plants were largely used as table centerpieces.

Among the novelties, the Park Floral Co. had Skimmia Japonica side by side with Ardisia crenulata. They were rather high in price in comparison with other stock, but sold well.

Various Notes.

The year 1907 was welcomed by society with a round of entertainments calling for the decorators' skill. The Denver club ball last Friday evening called for a large decoration. Red and green were used in the various rooms. The work was done by A. H. Bush, of the Daniels & Fisher Stores Co.

The Florists' Bowling League postponed its games until after the holidays, the first match to be rolled January 7.

The Scott Floral Co. has added a fine new wagon to its delivery department.

Greenhouse Heating.

CONVERTING A COIL BOILER.

Could a box coil pipe boiler be converted into a steam boiler for greenhouse heating? J. L. K.

No. I do not think it advisable to attempt to construct a steam boiler for greenhouse heating out of pipe coils. This would be a water tube boiler which would carry only a small amount of water, which would make it dangerous and uncertain. Water tube boilers for power purposes are not usually made in sizes smaller than 150 horse-power except for special uses, such as the flash boilers of automobiles. L. C. C.

PIPE FOR HEATING.

How many runs of pipe will be required, what size, and how best arranged to heat with hot water three houses 10x80 feet, ridge and furrow plan, no center walls? The outside walls are four feet and fully exposed except for a shed on the west end. The boiler is located in a cellar under the shed opposite the center house. The temperature is sometimes 45 degrees below zero. J. B.

The three houses in question can be piped as follows: If 2-inch pipe is used a 2½-inch flow under each ridge can be made to feed eight 2-inch returns through each house, i. e., three 2½-inch flow pipes and twenty-four 2-inch returns for the entire plant. If the benches are so disposed as to allow placing the radiation under them it would be well to put one or two more pipes under the benches next to the outside walls than under the others. If the piping is to be hung on the outside walls and on the posts under the middle gutters, see that the heavy coils are placed on the outside walls. Six pipes on each outside wall will be none too much, then scatter the other twelve under the benches as best you can to provide the desired bottom heat. L. C. C.

TROUBLE WITH HEATING.

I am having trouble with my heating plant. My house is 19½x125, three feet to the eaves and nine feet to the ridge. The boiler is twenty-seven inches by six feet and has thirty-seven 1½-inch flues. I have one 2½-inch flow which rises six feet, then runs through the length of the house with a gradual rise of eighteen inches. The main then branches into two 1½-inch pipes, each one feeding four 1½-inch returns. The returns enter a manifold and return to the boiler through two 1½-inch pipes. The expansion tank is ten feet above the boiler and connects the return close to the boiler. Would this boiler be big enough to heat another house the size of this one? My fire-box is twenty inches in diameter with a rocking grate. J. W. H.

You do not mention the difficulty with your heating plant, but the piping of the house is at fault if you are not getting heat enough. You have about one-half enough pipe in the house for a 60-degree temperature and the riser should be a 3-inch instead of 2½-inch pipe, if the piping is increased. The boiler in question has but little more than sufficient capacity for the house it is now used to heat. L. C. C.

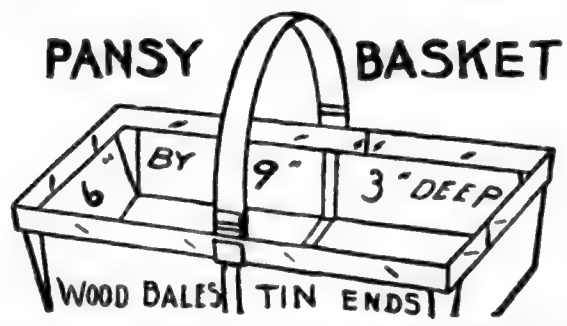
MILWAUKEE.

The Christmas Trade.

In summing up the Christmas business, returns show about same as last year. The same amount of business was done with considerably less stock. Prices ruled firm from time Christmas prices took effect and everything salable was sold at good prices.

Considering the weather conditions the last month carnations came in better than expected, but roses were away off in supply, likewise the quality showed the weakening effects of the continued dark weather. American Beauties were scarce and the available supply was cleaned up early.



As usual, red was the favorite Christmas color and all orders ran proportionately heavy in that color, making it necessary to cut to some extent or substitute other shades. Even white stock, which usually moves slowly, sold well. Prices on carnations ranged from $6 to $10 per hundred for good shipping stock; roses, from $8 to $18. Violets were about equal to demand, most of them going at $2 per hundred for doubles and $1.50 for singles. Stevia and Romans were in request; valley was plentiful and much of it was used to help fill out.

There was a big call for plants and there is room for a much larger supply of these for Christmas. Some good cyclamens, poinsettias and azaleas were displayed and found a ready market at profitable prices. The demand for cut poinsettias has increased and the supply was about cleaned up. Few mums were seen; lilies were also scarce. All in all, it was a satisfactory Christmas.

Holly was abundant. About fifteen carloads came into the city. Extra fancy stock sold at a good price, but too much of the medium and poorer grades was sold at too low figures to make the average profitable. Mistletoe was fine and more is being used every year. Bouquet green was practically out of the market this year. Moss wreaths were hard to obtain. Lots of bells were sold, but department store competition demoralized the price. The year 1906 has been a good one for the trade.

Beardstown, Ill.—Frank Bros. report a good Christmas trade in cut flowers and pot plants, about equal to last year.

Lyons, Kan.—Mrs. H. B. Smith reports that Christmas orders came in late, making it hard to get enough carnations to go around at the last. Prices were some higher than last year, but stock was good and fresh.

Six fit in bushel box to pack one upon another. Wood or wire handle. 100 samples, $1.10.

MILWAUKEE.

The Christmas Trade.

In summing up the Christmas business, returns show about same as last year. The same amount of business was done with considerably less stock. Prices ruled firm from time Christmas prices took effect and everything salable was sold at good prices.

Considering the weather conditions the last month carnations came in better than expected, but roses were away off in supply, likewise the quality showed the weakening effects of the continued dark weather. American Beauties were scarce and the available supply was cleaned up early.

As usual, red was the favorite Christmas color and all orders ran proportionately heavy in that color, making it necessary to cut to some extent or substitute other shades. Even white stock, which usually moves slowly, sold well. Prices on carnations ranged from $6 to $10 per hundred for good shipping stock; roses, from $8 to $18. Violets were about equal to demand, most of them going at $2 per hundred for doubles and $1.50 for singles. Stevia and Romans were in request; valley was plentiful and much of it was used to help fill out.

There was a big call for plants and there is room for a much larger supply of these for Christmas. Some good cyclamens, poinsettias and azaleas were displayed and found a ready market at profitable prices. The demand for cut poinsettias has increased and the supply was about cleaned up. Few mums were seen; lilies were also scarce. All in all, it was a satisfactory Christmas.

Holly was abundant. About fifteen carloads came into the city. Extra fancy stock sold at a good price, but too much of the medium and poorer grades was sold at too low figures to make the average profitable. Mistletoe was fine and more is being used every year. Bouquet green was practically out of the market this year. Moss wreaths were hard to obtain. Lots of bells were sold, but department store competition demoralized the price. The year 1906 has been a good one for the trade.

BEARDSTOWN, ILL.—Frank Bros. report a good Christmas trade in cut flowers and pot plants, about equal to last year.

LYONS, KAN.—Mrs. H. B. Smith reports that Christmas orders came in late, making it hard to get enough carnations to go around at the last. Prices were some higher than last year, but stock was good and fresh.

I AM overwhelmed with orders, from Boston to Seattle.—J. D. BRENNEMAN, Harrisburg, Pa.

I WISH you good will. Your paper has done me a lot of good.—THOMAS DUPEA, Seattle, Wash.

What others say about U-Bar greenhouses is always interesting to us, and here is an extract from the letter of Robert Williamson, Superintendent for Mrs. A. A. Anderson, Greenwich, Conn., that will interest you: "I consider that up to date there is nothing in horticultural construction to compare with the U-Bar greenhouse, as it gives the greatest amount of light, strength and durability, at the same time it looks neater than any other style of house." Send for catalog and let us prove why. Pierson U-Bar Company, Designers and Builders of U-Bar Greenhouses, Metropolitan Building, 4th Avenue and 23rd Street, New York.

You Often Confuse Change For Progress—change is simply changing—either for better or worse; progress is abandoning something good for something better. Take as an example, our cypress house, it's the best thing of the kind built (something good), but our Iron Frame is the very key-note of progress, it gives to you in one house all the strong points of our other constructions combined with the wonderful endurance of the iron frame (something better).

It's lighter—you know the difference by actual comparison.

When any wooden part does go, it has no effect on the frame because the frame is entirely self-sustaining.

It costs less in houses of good width and length—costs less for the framing—costs less to erect.

It's a case of whether you want a house to last a few years or one that's free from repairs and lasts a lifetime.

Send for our Iron Frame Catalog, it will help you decide.

NOW IS THE TIME TO BEGIN!

THE MEN WE MEET

ANTOINE WINTZER.

Antoine Wintzer's father emigrated to America in the year 1854. He brought with him all his family except the eldest son, who was then an active participant in the Crimean war. His father was a professional gardener and soon obtained a good position after landing at New York. Antoine was 6 years old when they arrived, and between the years 1854 and 1862 he attended the public schools, most of the time at Flushing, N. Y., where his father had moved in 1857. In March, 1862, when he was 15 years old, he entered the Parsons establishment as an apprentice. At this time the Parsons place was the largest producing nursery stock in America.

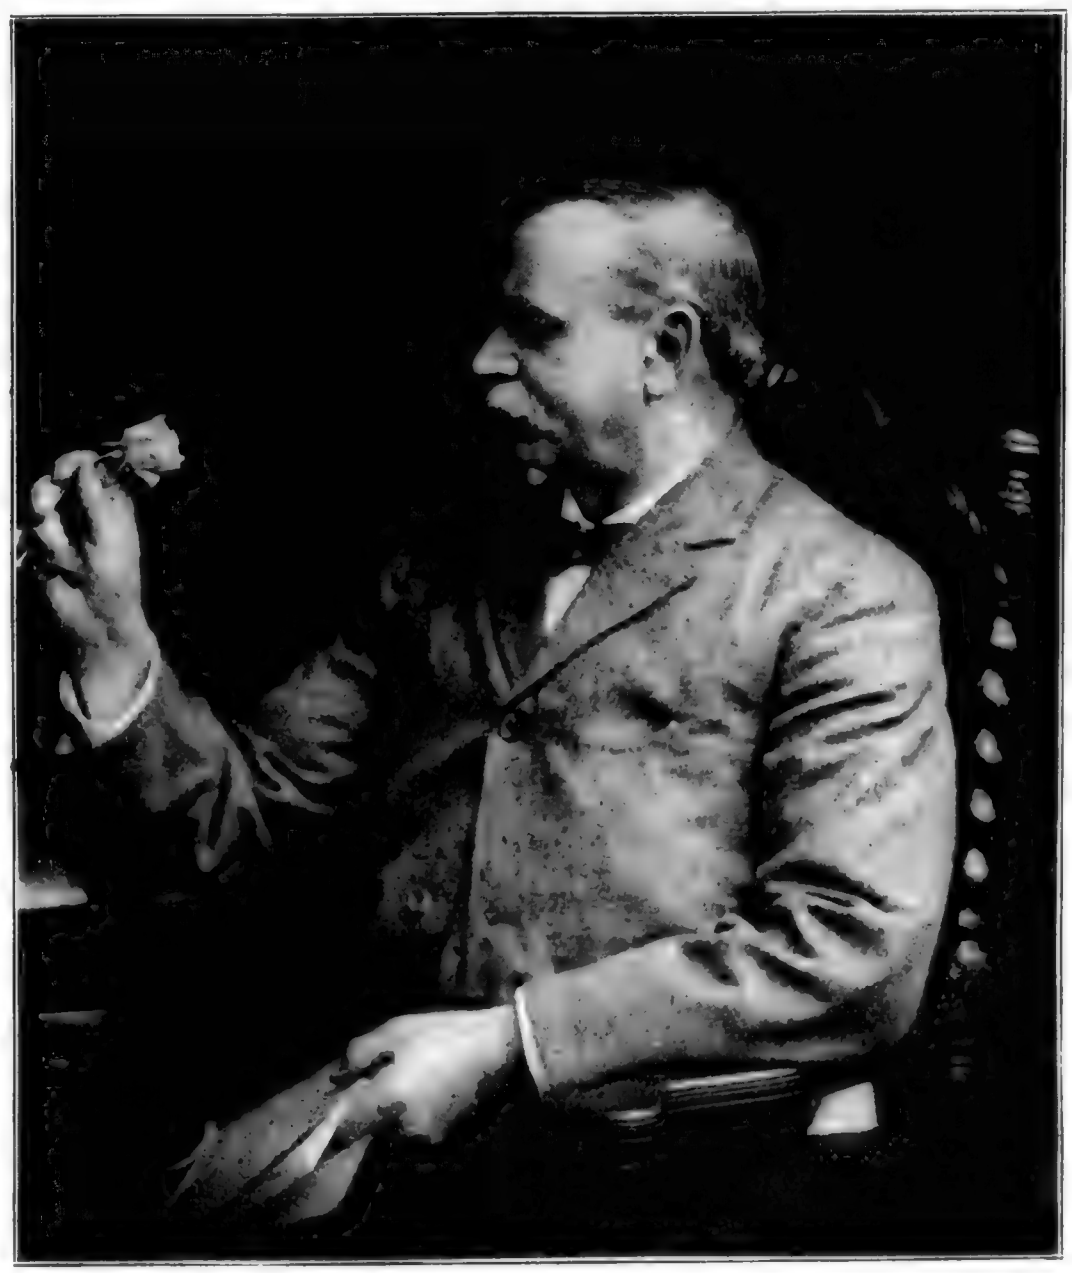
Antoine Wintzer inherited a genius for finding out the requirements of plant life, and under the skilful guidance of J. R. Trumpy he rapidly acquired the practical features of growing grapes and roses, but after spending two years at Parsons' he became dissatisfied, because the line of work they kept him at was too narrow—so he left Parsons and engaged with Eugene Bauman, one of the most prominent landscape gardeners in the east. His idea was to learn landscape work, but Mr. Bauman, who had now settled at Rahway, N. J., found that Mr. Wintzer was such a skilful propagator that he gave him full charge of the one greenhouse that he then owned. He allowed Mr. Wintzer to experiment with different methods of propagation and it was here that Mr. Wintzer reached settled conclusions, in certain lines, especially the propagation of hardy shrubbery, and he still feels that his experience with Mr. Bauman has been a most valuable asset in his life work. At Rahway Mr. Wintzer contracted malaria, and left his position with Mr. Bauman to recuperate at his father's home in Flushing.

After regaining his health Mr. Wintzer felt afraid to go back to Rahway, so he engaged with Mahlon Moon, at Morrisville, Pa., as propagator of evergreens, roses, etc., but his stay here was a short one, he being again threatened with an attack of malaria.

From Morrisville he went to Sewickley, Pa., and engaged with James Wardrope, but here again his stay was as brief, as he again contracted malaria and left for home, but Mr. Wintzer has most delightful recollections of his short sojourn at Wardrope's.

This brings us to a new chapter in his life, for, after again recovering his health, he went to West Grove, Pa., to accept a position with the Dingee & Conard Co. He arrived at West Grove July 31, 1866, the anniversary of his wife's birth, so he says he cannot forget the date. On August 1 he commenced work for the Dingee & Conard Co. as propagator. They had two small greenhouses, 10x80 feet each, at this time.

This company at that time was doing a general nursery business, having over 300 acres devoted to the growing of fruit and ornamental trees, shrubbery, roses, etc., which were sold almost entirely through agents. This business proved to be unprofitable and it was Mr. Wintzer's ability as a propagator of roses that saved the company from being totally wrecked financially, for it was perceived that there was an increasing demand for roses grown on their own roots, and Mr. Wintzer was very successful in growing the roses, by a process which he claims was his own invention.



At this time the roses were sold almost entirely as one-year plants and shipped by mail to the purchaser. By advertising in a very few papers, enough customers were found to take all the roses they could grow in the few greenhouses that then comprised the plant. But other greenhouses were built and a catalogue published to help make sales, so the business grew and prospered and almost every year new glass was added to the plant. This continued till the year 1892, when the greenhouses numbered seventy.

Mr. Wintzer's ability as a propagator was now fully established; he had produced fine, healthy rose plants all these years and the number he could grow was only limited by the space at his command to grow them in.

Unfortunately, in 1892, differences arose in the management of the Dingee & Conard Co. and the late Alfred F. Conard, who had always been president of the company, withdrew. A year later, in 1893, Mr. Wintzer withdrew, leaving to others the splendid business that had been reared upon his life work as a skilful, untiring and devoted grower of the queen of flowers.

Mr. Wintzer had purchased a small farm about one mile from West Grove and had built thereon a commodious modern residence and in the fall of 1893 he erected two greenhouses. His business was continued with varying success and connections till 1897. He was anxious to enlarge the business and the late Alfred F. Conard, who had been associated with him for so many years previous to 1892, and S. Morris Jones, a business man of West Grove, knowing Mr. Wintzer's great ability as a propagator, furnished capital to organize the Conard & Jones Co. The new company purchased from Mr. Wintzer thirty-five acres of ground and his plant, which had grown to seven greenhouses.

That year the company erected seven more greenhouses, an up-to-date packing-house, a large boiler-room, and coal bins, and a frost-proof house for storing dormant plants. The new company has been very successful, so that the plant has now been largely increased in size. They issue a large catalogue, roses having first place, and in connection therewith shrubbery, cannas, bedding and decorative plants, flower seeds and bulbs.

In 1893, when Mr. Wintzer started business on his own account, he commenced a careful, methodical line of work to improve the canna. In this line he has been successful beyond his most sanguine expectation, but most deservedly so, for no one who has not followed him in it can imagine the amount of work or the time required to develop a shade of color when there is no parent of that shade to work with. It takes exceptionally good judgment on the part of the hybridizer to improve each succeeding year the feature in the plant or flower that he is trying to develop. Mr. Wintzer has shown that he has this ability in a marked degree, and Mont Blanc, Buttercup, Betsy Ross, West Grove, Maiden's Blush, and other varieties that he has raised place him in the first rank, if not at the head of canna producing experts.

Mr. Wintzer at the age of 59 years is still as hard a worker as ever, his health is good and we look forward to many more years of successful work from his hands and brain. Above all else Mr. Wintzer wants it to be understood that rose growing is his specialty; he wants the company of which he has been vice-president and manager since its start to be recognized as second to none in producing roses of the best quality, on their own roots, and he wants to live long enough to establish the fact that his method of propagating roses is the best method that has yet been devised.

PETUNIA THE QUEEN.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of a new seedling petunia named The Queen. This originated with the Yates Floral Co., at Canajoharie, N. Y., and the seed is to be distributed jointly by the Yates Floral Co. and the Scranton Florists' Supply Co., Scranton, Pa. The illustration shows a most attractive plant, the large flowers being remarkably double and the general habit of the plant excellent. The double petunia is in high favor, through recent improvements, and this sort is sure to be widely tested as soon as the originator is ready to offer seeds.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Astilbe.

It is time to start astilbe, because, as will be often said, Easter is so early. We can scarcely call astilbe a profitable plant. It takes up lots of room, and yet we don't like to be without a batch of it. It does not occupy the benches long and can be entirely cleaned out after Easter. The first two weeks in the greenhouse it is just as well off beneath a bench, or until the foliage starts, when it should be given light. The plants usually are rammed into 6-inch pots, sometimes 7-inch or 8-inch. Whatever size it is, the pot is filled with a mass of roots by flowering time and it is almost impossible to give the roots water enough. A month before they are in flower stand every plant in a saucer in which keep constantly some weak liquid manure. You will soon notice a marked difference between these plants and those that are permitted to dry out several times daily.

Propagating Bedding Plants.

How is your propagating bed doing? From now on for two months the most favorable conditions prevail for rooting the great majority of soft-wooded bedding plants. Such quick rooting plants as coleus, ageratums, etc., can wait a few weeks, but there are others that should now receive attention. That useful little variegated geranium, Mme. Salleroi, that we recommended you to lift in the fall, now can be pulled to pieces. Every shoot will root and make a good bedding plant for the month of May. Lemon verbenas and lantanas that have been resting beneath a bench since they were brought in should be shaken out, repotted, the green tips of the wood cut back, frequently syringed, and they will soon give you an abundance of cuttings which root easily if never allowed to wilt in the sand.

When you start your hydrangeas they will be sure to provide you a few cuttings that will spring from the base of the plant. These are the best of cuttings and if they go into the sand you will have a good start to make fine plants for growing in pots this summer. Acalypha is another plant that should be propagated now.

It is difficult to get satisfactory plants of lobelias from seed for baskets and vases and it is better to pot a few plants in the fall, cutting back the long growths. Cuttings of these should be put in, also that useful little plant, the double sweet alyssum, of which we seldom have too many when bedding time comes.

Seeds to Sow.

There are not many seeds to be sown now. If your business calls for the filling of vases and window-boxes, then you should sow some Dracaena indivisa, which is unequaled as a plant to stand all weathers. It takes two years from seed to make a plant of useful size, but it is well to sow some every year and then you will not run out of this hardy plant. Another useful plant is Grevillea robusta. It is called the silk oak and its fern-like foliage is very useful, especially in window-boxes.

Although many consider it early to sow verbenas, they should be sown by the end of the month. They do not always germinate successfully and if sown this month you will be able to get a cutting from each seedling. Procure seeds of the best strain you hear of. Some seed houses catalogue verbena seed in separate colors, red, blue, white, etc., but a good mixture will generally fill the bill. The advantage of seedling verbenas over plants from cuttings is that they are free from mildew, rust and other diseases which nearly always afflict plants carried over winter in a greenhouse. The seedlings are sure to grow and flower freely.

Verbena Venosa.

Don't forget at the end of the month or early in February, to sow a packet of Verbena venosa. This is a distinct species from our common verbenas and is always raised from seed, a strong, vigorous grower, free flowering, of a bright purple color and when in combination with a variegated geranium it has a most pleasing effect. This verbena never needs to be put into pots. Pricked out in flats, it does finely transplanted to the flower beds.

Ferns for Window-boxes.

For the last two seasons we have been called on to fill many veranda-boxes with plants of Boston and Scottii ferns alone. Many people prefer the cool and graceful fern fronds to flowering plants and I think their taste is correct, so no foot of bench-room should be left unoccupied. Any corner where you can spread four or five inches of soil should be filled with young plants of these ferns. They will make twice the growth they would in pots. They can be lifted after Easter and put into 5-inch pots and be established by the middle of May.

Easter Plants.

We are having a dark, gloomy winter, but not a cold one. Look out for that new growth on your azaleas and keep it rubbed off or it will take the strength away from your flower buds, which will come blind. It is much easier to retard your Easter azaleas now than it is the latter end of March, and sorts like Mme. Vander Cruyssen should be kept only a few degrees above freezing. Don't be scared; an azalea will endure anything above actual freezing.

Japan lilies intended for Easter will now need 65 degrees at night. It is only eleven weeks now until the great feast of lilies and the weeks quickly slip by. Why there is need of hurry is because we will not have two or three weeks of bright April weather to help us out at the end of our efforts. Squirt a weak solution of nicotine into the crowns of the plants every two weeks and that will keep down the aphis.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

BEATRICE, NEB.—The Dole Floral Co. advertises that "while dumping manure has been forbidden in many parts of the city, they will furnish a dumping ground for all. People who have refuse of this character can drive in near the greenhouse and find a dumping ground." It brings them much valuable fertilizer.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

LUNCHEON FLOWERS.

Often at luncheons and sometimes at more formal affairs the flowers are, on rising, distributed to the guests. The flowers may be arranged so that they may be taken apart into separate bouquets for distribution without trouble, the stems of each bunch being wrapped in tin foil, yet when all together they do not look like separate bouquets.

Another way in which they have been presented to guests after a luncheon is by being lightly and gracefully laid into a fancy hamper-shaped basket. Delicate sweet-scented flowers with adiantum are charming when so brought in for a farewell token. More persons can be easily provided for in this way than in the first, perhaps.

It is sometimes an easy way to have the guests on rising from table take flowers with them. Not only one choice rose laid for this purpose by each cover, but flowers used as a border, or placed flat upon the table in sprays. In this case the waiters at the end of the luncheon or dinner quickly turn the stems toward each woman, so that she sees that it is intended that all are to take away the flowers and foliage used for decorations.

LAND OF THE FREE.

W. J. Palmer has been arrested on a warrant sworn out by one Mabel Gillespie, charged with violating the law prohibiting the employment of child labor. It appears that a school boy, under the legal age for factory employment, wanted some Christmas money and asked Mr. Palmer for a job. He was set to opening and closing the door for Christmas shoppers. This may be the land of the free, but it is apparent that the interpretation of its multiplicity of laws calls for the exercise of a little common sense.

AN INDIANA STORE.

On this page are two illustrations reproduced from photographs recently made of the store of August F. Beyer, at South Bend, one of the busy and growing cities of Indiana. Mr. Beyer is one of the oldest florists in Indiana and the store is in charge of his son, Paul, who is well up in store management, having spent several years with leading Chicago retailers, including the Geo. Wittbold Co., which handles any kind of an order, from filling a fern dish to sodding a lawn, from selling a boutonniere to deco-place, and in connection therewith shrubbery, cannas, bedding and decorative plants, flower seeds and bulbs.

In 1893, when Mr. Wintzer started business on his own account, he commenced a careful, methodical line of work to improve the canna. In this line he has been successful beyond his most sanguine expectation, but most deservedly so, for no one who has not followed him in it can imagine the amount of work or the time required to develop a shade of color when there is no parent of that shade to work with. It takes exceptionally good judgment on the part of the hybridizer to improve each succeeding year the feature in the plant or flower that he is trying to develop. Mr. Wintzer has shown that he has this ability in a marked degree, and Mont Blanc, Buttercup, Betsy Ross, West Grove, Maiden's Blush, and other varieties that he has raised place him in the first rank, if not at the head of canna producing experts.

Mr. Wintzer at the age of 59 years is still as hard a worker as ever, his health is good and we look forward to many more years of successful work from his hands and brain. Above all else Mr. Wintzer wants it to be understood that rose growing is his specialty; he wants the company of which he has been vice-president and manager since its start to be recognized as second to none in producing roses of the best quality, on their own roots, and he wants to live long enough to establish the fact that his method of propagating roses is the best method that has yet been devised.

PETUNIA THE QUEEN.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of a new seedling petunia named The Queen. This originated with the Yates Floral Co., at Canajoharie, N. Y., and the seed is to be distributed jointly by the Yates Floral Co. and the Scranton Florists' Supply Co., Scranton, Pa. The illustration shows a most attractive plant, the large flowers being remarkably double and the general habit of the plant excellent. The double petunia is in high favor, through recent improvements, and this sort is sure to be widely tested as soon as the originator is ready to offer seeds.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Astilbe.

It is time to start astilbe, because, as will be often said, Easter is so early. We can scarcely call astilbe a profitable plant. It takes up lots of room, and yet we don't like to be without a batch of it. It does not occupy the benches long and can be entirely cleaned out after Easter. The first two weeks in the greenhouse it is just as well off beneath a bench, or until the foliage starts, when it should be given light. The plants usually are rammed into 6-inch pots, sometimes 7-inch or 8-inch. Whatever size it is, the pot is filled with a mass of roots by flowering time and it is almost impossible to give the roots water enough. A month before they are in flower stand every plant in a saucer in which keep constantly some weak liquid manure. You will soon notice a marked difference between these plants and those that are permitted to dry out several times daily.

Propagating Bedding Plants.

How is your propagating bed doing? From now on for two months the most favorable conditions prevail for rooting the great majority of soft-wooded bedding plants. Such quick rooting plants as coleus, ageratums, etc., can wait a few weeks, but there are others that should now receive attention. That useful little variegated geranium, Mme. Salleroi, that we recommended you to lift in the fall, now can be pulled to pieces. Every shoot will root and make a good bedding plant for the month of May. Lemon verbenas and lantanas that have been resting beneath a bench since they were brought in should be shaken out, repotted, the green tips of the wood cut back, frequently syringed, and they will soon give you an abundance of cuttings which root easily if never allowed to wilt in the sand.

When you start your hydrangeas they will be sure to provide you a few cuttings that will spring from the base of the plant. These are the best of cuttings and if they go into the sand you will have a good start to make fine plants for growing in pots this summer. Acalypha is another plant that should be propagated now.

It is difficult to get satisfactory plants of lobelias from seed for baskets and vases and it is better to pot a few plants in the fall, cutting back the long growths. Cuttings of these should be put in, also that useful little plant, the double sweet alyssum, of which we seldom have too many when bedding time comes.

Seeds to Sow.

There are not many seeds to be sown now. If your business calls for the filling of vases and window-boxes, then you should sow some Dracaena indivisa, which is unequaled as a plant to stand all weathers. It takes two years from seed to make a plant of useful size, but it is well to sow some every year and then you will not run out of this hardy plant. Another useful plant is Grevillea robusta. It is called the silk oak and its fern-like foliage is very useful, especially in window-boxes.

Although many consider it early to sow verbenas, they should be sown by the end of the month. They do not always germinate successfully and if sown this month you will be able to get a cutting from each seedling. Procure seeds of the best strain you hear of. Some seed houses catalogue verbena seed in separate colors, red, blue, white, etc., but a good mixture will generally fill the bill. The advantage of seedling verbenas over plants from cuttings is that they are free from mildew, rust and other diseases which nearly always afflict plants carried over winter in a greenhouse. The seedlings are sure to grow and flower freely.

Verbena Venosa.

Don't forget at the end of the month or early in February, to sow a packet of Verbena venosa. This is a distinct species from our common verbenas and is always raised from seed, a strong, vigorous grower, free flowering, of a bright purple color and when in combination with a variegated geranium it has a most pleasing effect. This verbena never needs to be put into pots. Pricked out in flats, it does finely transplanted to the flower beds.

Ferns for Window-boxes.

For the last two seasons we have been called on to fill many veranda-boxes with plants of Boston and Scottii ferns alone. Many people prefer the cool and graceful fern fronds to flowering plants and I think their taste is correct, so no foot of bench-room should be left unoccupied. Any corner where you can spread four or five inches of soil should be filled with young plants of these ferns. They will make twice the growth they would in pots. They can be lifted after Easter and put into 5-inch pots and be established by the middle of May.

Easter Plants.

We are having a dark, gloomy winter, but not a cold one. Look out for that new growth on your azaleas and keep it rubbed off or it will take the strength away from your flower buds, which will come blind. It is much easier to retard your Easter azaleas now than it is the latter end of March, and sorts like Mme. Vander Cruyssen should be kept only a few degrees above freezing. Don't be scared; an azalea will endure anything above actual freezing.

Japan lilies intended for Easter will now need 65 degrees at night. It is only eleven weeks now until the great feast of lilies and the weeks quickly slip by. Why there is need of hurry is because we will not have two or three weeks of bright April weather to help us out at the end of our efforts. Squirt a weak solution of nicotine into the crowns of the plants every two weeks and that will keep down the aphis.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

BEATRICE, NEB.—The Dole Floral Co. advertises that "while dumping manure has been forbidden in many parts of the city, they will furnish a dumping ground for all. People who have refuse of this character can drive in near the greenhouse and find a dumping ground." It brings them much valuable fertilizer.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

LUNCHEON FLOWERS.

Often at luncheons and sometimes at more formal affairs the flowers are, on rising, distributed to the guests. The flowers may be arranged so that they may be taken apart into separate bouquets for distribution without trouble, the stems of each bunch being wrapped in tin foil, yet when all together they do not look like separate bouquets.

Another way in which they have been presented to guests after a luncheon is by being lightly and gracefully laid into a fancy hamper-shaped basket. Delicate sweet-scented flowers with adiantum are charming when so brought in for a farewell token. More persons can be easily provided for in this way than in the first, perhaps.

It is sometimes an easy way to have the guests on rising from table take flowers with them. rating a cathedral. Not only is Mr. Beyer able to execute any order he may get but he is thoroughly acquainted with the purchasing power of a dollar under varying conditions and applies himself closely to business, two qualifications which go a long way toward success. He has made good progress since he started for himself at South Bend. He early found he had not the patronage that would stand the prices charged for the best stock in high class metropolitan stores, but that a satisfactory volume of business could be done with dependable stock, living prices, and on this line he is steadily developing his business.

SEASONABLE FLOWER SEEDS.

Will you kindly inform me what flower seeds can be sown for both Easter and Decoration day? W. C. E.

We know of few, if any, flower seeds that can be sown as late as this and be in flower at Easter, unless it be the candytuft, which you should sow at once in flats and when an inch or so high transplant in four or five inches of soil, six inches apart, in a cool house and on a light bench. In plants or roots there is a greater variety that could be brought in by Easter if planted and started at once. There are astilbe and freesia, besides many hardy shrubs that there is plenty of time to start yet for Easter, and deutzia and lilac. But I really cannot think of any seeds that can be sown now that would be useful or profitable. Sweet peas can be sown now in a light, sunny house and would be in flower for Decoration day, and cold storage Japan lilies, if procured at once, started and kept in a cool house, would come in by the end of May. The above is too big a query. Ask us something more specific.

As has many times been stated in these notes, cleanliness is essential in all operations connected with propagation, and to express more clearly the full meaning of the word, it may be well to state that there are at least three degrees of cleanliness: tolerably clean, clean and spotlessly clean—the latter, figuratively speaking, being the degree to strive for. This is especially true as regards those details which have to do with maintaining the sand in good condition for successive batches of cuttings.

My recent advice, to leave the propagating sand outdoors until near the time needed was with the object of exposing it to the action of frost. This, I believe, is not only, for all practical purposes, as beneficial as sterilization, but, as is the case with soil, it is in a certain sense improved mechanically, or physically, as you may choose.

After being screened to remove pebbles, sticks and all other foreign matter possible, a still further inspection should be made during filling and leveling in the bench to make sure no matter subject to decay remains.

Before firming it is our practice to flush the bench; that is, to apply sufficient clear, cold water to flood the whole. In passing off the water will carry out small particles of soil or clay if present.

Prepare cuttings in a place apart from the propagating house, at least from the bench, to guard against any trimmings getting into the sand. Any and all in a batch of well cared for cuttings showing signs of wilt should be removed. The chances are they will decay, causing trouble, and even if revived and eventually rooted they will turn out cripples.

During the interval between inserting in sand and rooting, give two or three weak applications of ammoniacal copper solution. A teaspoonful to five gallons of water is about the proper strength. These are not extra applications of water, but the addition of the solution to the regular watering, and applied in the same manner, it being assumed that this operation is done with a fine rose.

After removing a rooted batch, loosen up the sand to a depth of an inch or so by raking, allowing a few days to air out; and if during this time the sun can have full play on the space, all the better. This depends, however, on the weather, arrangements of shade, etc.

With all careful preparation and due attention to every detail calculated to prevent trouble, there is no positive assurance that we shall be free from it. To gain success we must also have strong, healthy stock from which to obtain cuttings. There must be no laxity on the part of a grower in his attention to watering, temperature, shading and, to touch once more on that perhaps threadbare subject, cleanliness. How often, alas! do we see the paths of a propagating house strewn with discarded cuttings, or other refuse, the sashbars sadly in need of a scrubbing and, if nothing more, a coat of whitewash.

To allow carelessness to enter into the work of propagation, thinking to remedy the evil, more than likely to occur by frequent change of sand, seems to me a waste of time and raw material.

BENCHING A LOW HOUSE.

I want to bench a low house for carnations. The house is four feet at the gutters. I use steam heat. I want to make the benches as low as possible and get the best results. How low should that be? Will it be best to put the heating pipes under the benches? P. H.

You do not give enough data about your house for me to form an opinion as to arrangement of benches and pipes. If it is a single, or detached, house, with glass under the gutter on the south side, there should be no trouble. You can make the benches as low as you like in that case. But if the sides are boarded up to the gutters, then you will not be able to get much out of the south bench in the way of cut blooms. Either take off the boards on the south side and put in glass down to within eighteen inches of the ground, or else raise that bench high enough so that it will get the sun all winter and, if it is not far enough away from the glass for blooming plants then use it for low-growing stock, such as your young carnation plants, etc. When there is no shading to be taken into account, then the height of your benches should be governed by what you may consider the most convenient to work. Allow at least thirty inches for headroom, but more will be better.

The steam pipes do not need to be under the benches; in fact, they should not be unless there is enough room so they can be a foot away from the bench soil. Otherwise you will have trouble in keeping the soil from drying out at the bottom. Distribute them evenly through the house; that is the main point.

FEEDING CARNATIONS.

I want to feed my carnations. What proportion of pulverized sheep manure would you use in the soil for this purpose? F. R. M.

Mix your pulverized sheep manure with soil, say about one part manure to two parts of screened soil. Spread this on the bench about half an inch thick and water soon after. This makes an excellent food if your plants are in good condition for it. A. F. J. B.

GOOD COMPANIONS.

We are going to plant a part of one house to Enchantress next summer and would like to know if Lady Bountiful, for white, would do to plant in the other part. Will they stand the same temperature and treatment? A. R. & S.

Yes, Lady Bountiful will do splendidly in the same house with Enchantress. Both enjoy the same temperature. Plant Bountiful where the light is the strongest and Enchantress where there is the most shade from the roof, etc. Bountiful will come more free from that pink mottling you sometimes see when the light is weak in cold weather, while Enchantress will have a better color when not subjected to the glaring sunlight.

SPLIT CARNATION FLOWERS.

Improved methods in growing carnations and the introduction of improved varieties, though having made great progress in the last decade, have not as yet mitigated to any great degree the provoking habit of the divine flower of producing a large percentage of malformed blooms, commonly termed splits. How to mend these flowers so as to enable the grower to obtain as high a price for them as possible has no doubt engaged the best attention of not a few carnation specialists. Split carnations are a product of every carnation growing establishment, which, we are safe to say, will be with us for some years to come at least, and what careful cultural methods fail to accomplish while the blooms are developing on the plants must be provided for after they are cut.

A little device upon which a patent has been applied for by the inventor, A. J. Baur, of Erie, Pa., does the work, is practically invisible and leaves the least possible room for objection from even the most particular customer. Instead of passing around or through the flower, the little wire clip used serves simply to hold together the two broken edges of the split calyx, holding it in its natural position and bringing the petals into the position that they would have occupied had the calyx not been split. So well is this accomplished that Mr. Baur says the flowers, after being thus mended, have been regularly sold with the highest grade at the highest price of fancy blooms, and thus far not a single objection has been heard.

The accompanying illustrations give a good idea of the work done by the device. The first two illustrations are from photographs as nearly true to life as an expert photographer was able to make them. They were taken from the same flower, of the variety Mrs. Thos. W. Lawson, before and after mending. The small portion of the wire clip used to mend the break that shows outside the calyx may be seen in the illustration if carefully looked for. No effort was made to conceal anything in taking and finishing the pictures, the photographer being instructed to bring out the details as nearly true to life as possible, so that all that is lost is in making the plates and printing. The wire clip, being made of galvanized wire, is almost invisible against the color of carnation foliage. In the illustration showing the mended flower a slight malformation may be seen in the arrangement of the petals. This is due to the difficulty of having been compelled to put on the clip with a common pair of pincers, the brass model being in the hands of the manufacturer at the time of taking the pictures. One of the guard petals was destroyed in the operation, giving a portion of the flower an empty appearance.

The third picture shows the pincers that are used in applying the clips. It was taken from a wooden model, for the same reason as that above mentioned—that the brass model was in the hands of the manufacturer. It was not possible to show the smaller details in the instrument on this account, but the picture gives a good idea of the general construction of the pincers. The jaws are shaped so that the wire clips can be easily and quickly picked up. The front end of the pincers is provided with two prongs, by means of which the stray petals are pushed up into their natural position with one movement, and the act of catching the two broken edges of the calyx and pressing down the teeth of the clip complete the operation. It is all done in much less time than it takes to tell it. The fourth illustration shows the exact shape and size of the wire clip and how much of it is visible after being applied to the flower. The clip used at present and shown in the second picture is made of No. 22 wire, but a smaller size will be used in the manufacture of those that will be offered for sale, namely No. 25.

The inventor anticipates a great demand for the device, and with that in view has given a large order for its manufacture. He will be at the convention of the American Carnation Society to be held at Toronto this month, where the invention and the work done by it will pass under the critical scrutiny of the foremost carnation men of the country.

Handling New Varieties.

You will soon be receiving cuttings of the new varieties you bought if you were wise enough to get your order in early. Those that have already reached me are all nice, clean stock and if kept growing will make fine plants for benching. What a difference there is between the stock that is sent out nowadays, of the novelties, and the way they used to reach us a few years ago! This is as it should be, and if you do not succeed with the varieties sent out it is your own fault, generally. I say this advisedly and I will tell you why so many times you fail with a variety after the originator had great success with it.

One of the most frequent causes of failure is your greed. You get the idea into your head that $12 per hundred is a big price to pay, but that you will be smart this time and steal a march on the disseminator. You will demand your cuttings early, extra early, and when they come you will pot them into rich soil and set them in the warm end of the house and whoop them up every way you can. About March 1 you will get a good cutting off of each plant, and instead of 100 plants you will have 200 plants for the $12.

In taking off that cutting you cut down that young plant close to the pot; in fact, you take away most of the plant. If it were a strong, sturdy young plant it would hurt it most severely; but think how it must injure a plant that has been forced to make a quick, unnatural growth, to suddenly take off practically all the growing portion when it is in full growth. The check is most ruinous. When the lower eyes break out it is in a half-hearted way and the growth is weak and prone to contract any disease that happens along; so that by planting-out time you have 100 plants that are crippled and weak and 100 cuttings that are very late, and are practically blooming shoots, too near the bud to make really first-class plants.

Had you potted up the original cuttings, the same as your regular stock, given them the same care and topped them properly, you would have had 100 fine, sturdy plants instead of a lot of runts. The next winter you not only become disgusted with the variety and throw out a good thing, but you lose the revenue from the space they occupy.

You not only hurt yourself financially and wrong the variety, but you wrong the originator. Don't imagine that when you pay him the money, the deal is done with as far as he is concerned. While he would perhaps not care, and perhaps would have no legal right to care, if you made a dozen cuttings from each cutting he sells you, yet he has a right to demand that you handle them in such a manner that they will be able to show their real worth. When a plant breeder sends out a new variety he has more at stake than the money he expects to take in from the sales. His reputation is worth more to him than the money, for upon that reputation will depend his future success in launching new varieties upon the market. And so, when he ships you a portion of the stock that he sends out, he also sends you a portion of his reputation with it, and for which you are responsible. When you ruin the plants you also ruin that much of his reputation, unless you will let it be known that it was your fault entirely that the variety failed.

Another reason is that you do not take enough pains to acquaint yourself with the peculiarities of a variety and its special wants. You buy a dozen new varieties, set them side by side and handle them exactly alike from beginning to end. Part of them succeed while others fail, simply because they should have had a little different treatment. For instance, one variety may want to be topped close until it has made a good stool, while another, if topped too much, will grow grassy. One will want to be planted early, while another will suffer if disturbed during hot weather. One variety will make an early crop of inferior blooms, which, if taken off while in the bud stage, will cause the next crop to come just right and of high quality; while another variety, if topped back after being housed, will refuse to make another crop until toward spring. It takes an expert to foresee these things and even then he will miss it frequently.

When you buy a new variety, write to the originator for instructions. He will gladly give them, if the variety needs any special treatment, for the sake of his own reputation. Ask him about the texture of his soil, about feeding and about the temperature required and about the stem; whether it needs strengthening with wood ashes, etc. Also whether the variety is inclined to disease in any way, and about thrips, etc. I am sure I would not hesitate to answer any such questions honestly, and it ought not to injure the sale of any variety.

When a man tells you that a variety is proof against all the ills of the species, that it has not a single fault and that it outranks all others in quality and quantity, then you had better investigate a little, quietly, before you invest. I have never known such a variety and I doubt if you ever will. But do not mistake peculiarities for faults. They are quite distinct. A peculiarity can be remedied or, at least, need not be detrimental, while a fault cannot be overcome altogether, and is harmful.

Toronto Exhibition.

President Dunlop has authorized me to announce that exhibitors at the show to be held in Toronto, Ont., January 23 and 24 will be given until 2 p. m. January 23, instead of 1 p. m., as announced in the premium list, to stage exhibits.

This addition of one hour to the time for staging was thought advisable on account of the fact that some of the trains do not get in until 10:30 a. m. and if they should be a bit late it would not give exhibitors time to get their flowers staged by 1 p. m.

Kindly remember that entries are to reach the secretary not later than Wednesday, January 16. Entries made at the show cost $1 for each entry, and if they do not reach Lancaster, Pa., by January 16 there is danger of their coming in after I have left for Toronto.

A VISIT TO J. E. HAINES.

A very interesting collection of carnations was seen on a visit to J. E. Haines, at Bethlehem, Pa., last week. Mr. Haines, who began this business but twelve years ago, he tells us, has all his life been a great lover of flowers. He has taken a great fancy to raising seedlings and has a number of good promise. Twelve years ago he put up a small greenhouse to grow lettuce, radishes, etc., more for a pastime than for profit. In a few years he began experimenting in carnations and finally devoted all his time to growing new varieties of carnations, finding the work interesting and having good results.

Last year he distributed the John E. Haines, red, named for himself. On the home place this is looking grand, full of buds from one end of the house to the other. William Mangan, the foreman, tells us that they look just that way from the time they begin to bloom until thrown out in July. He says they make three blooms to any other red he has yet seen. In color, it certainly is fine. Though it was quite widely disseminated in 1906, orders are coming in nicely this year.

The benches of Imperial and Pink Imperial show that they are vigorous growers. The stems run high above everything else grown in the houses. The colors are takers in this vicinity, as well as in New York at A. J. Guttman's, where they found ready sale over the Christmas holidays. Mr. Haines was not able to supply one-third of the demand. Each year he uses more plants for flowering purposes and each year the demand is greater.

Among the coming varieties is a fine daybreak pink, a shade deeper than Enchantress, somewhat like the La France rose shade, well formed, fine calyx, and large; a flower now in bloom measures three and three-fourths inches. It has long, stiff stems, and is a thrifty grower. Mr. Haines also has a pink which he has marked No. 6. He says it is the greatest producer he has ever grown, beginning early and blooming the whole year round. It is good for field blooming as well as indoors.

The Star of Bethlehem, a pure yellow, is a pleasing shade, a free bloomer and has good stem. There are other promising pink, white, red and variegated seedlings coming on.

On the place can be seen Enchantress, My Maryland, White Perfection, Pocahontas and Jessica. William J. Mangan, a good all-round man, has charge of the growing part. The houses never looked better. He has worked among flowers since he was a boy of 10 years. The last six years previous to entering the employ of Mr. Haines he was in the employ of John Wanamaker, Philadelphia. Mr. Haines is also assisted by his daughter, Mrs. George Haines Weber, who takes great interest in the business and aids her father by keeping the books and attending to the correspondence.

In the summer of 1906, three greenhouses were added to the plant. They are filled with his three new varieties, John E. Haines, which was disseminated in 1906, and Imperial and Pink Imperial, now being sent out.

FORCING FOR EASTER.

Which are the best strains of ten weeks' stocks and candytuft for forcing for cut flowers and when should they be sown to be in bloom for Easter? When must gladioli bulbs be planted in a temperature of 50 degrees to be in bloom for Easter? W. B. & S.

The ten weeks' variety of stock is the only one you could expect to get in flower by Easter, sowing as late as this. These come in a variety of colors; a pure white called Mount Blanc is fine. The finest white candytuft you can buy is Empress and both the stocks and candytuft should be sown at once. If you contemplate growing candytuft every season you must select the finest spikes for seed. By selection for several years you can produce a strain of candytuft which will be a wonderful improvement on the seed you bought.

It is impossible to flower common gladioli by Easter, 1907, in a temperature of 50 degrees. I doubt if they would be in bloom in any temperature by that date. They are very slow. If planted now they would be in bloom during May. W. S.

ASTERS IN MISSOURI.

Kindly let me know what varieties of asters in all colors would pay best to grow in the state of Missouri. What time should the seed be sown and how should they be handled for early outdoor blooming? W. W.

I know of no reason why asters are difficult to grow in Missouri, but have been told by residents of St. Louis that the climate of Missouri is not favorable to produce fine flowers of the popular annual. I would recommend you to try a few of all the leading varieties, or at least the leading varieties, which are Comet, Victoria, Truffaut's Peony-flowered and the late branching form. There are other varieties, but the above will cover the season, especially if you include the Early Market variety.

For an early crop the seed is usually sown in flats only covered enough to hide the seed. When the seed leaf is fully developed they are transplanted into other flats in two or three inches of soil, one inch or a little more apart. This transplanting is a simple job, yet there are one or two points about it that you should be particular to observe. For instance, the seedlings must be planted deep enough so that the seed leaf is resting on the surface of the soil, and the soil must be made firm and compact around the roots of the seedlings. The first watering will settle the soil on the surface sufficiently.

Instead of flats you can transplant the seedlings into a vacant carnation or violet bed, but I prefer the flats of convenient size, because they can be removed outdoors and the plants hardened off and the plants can be carried in them to the very spot where you are planting in the field.

Our first sowing is made in early March and other sowings at intervals of two weeks. Many asters are sown in coldframes in drills and transplanted in other frames. Animal manure is considered better than any chemical fertilizer for asters and they should be within reach of the hose, for many a fine field is often ruined by a long spell of dry weather. In the months of July and August, and sometimes September, the early varieties can be planted one foot apart. Victoria and Truffaut's should have at least eighteen inches of space and the branching varieties two feet. Leave out every fifth row of plants. You will need this space to hoe, water and pick flowers. W. S.

STOCK FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

Please tell me what is the best lily and its treatment for Decoration day. Also, what other plants and flowers are profitable for florists with small ranges? E. E.

The Japan lilies, or, more properly, the bulbs of Lilium longiflorum grown in Japan, are best for this late date. It would be quite feasible to leave these lilies out in a frame until the first part of March and then, with little forcing, have them in flower for Memorial day. But there would be danger of their being hurt by our cold weather of January and February. Therefore, I would advise potting them when received and after six weeks in the coldframe bring them into the greenhouse the middle of December and place them in a cool house. A house 40 to 45 degrees at night will be warm enough. The natural increase of temperature and sunlight will bring them on fast enough.

In the New Houses of J. E. Haines, Bethlehem, Pa.

Some ten years ago, when the Japan bulbs first began to be imported, we received 1,000 bulbs too late, we then thought, to force for Easter. So we kept them in a cool house and they came in just right for Memorial day. They were free of all disease and I have never once seen a more even lot of plants. We don't attribute the success to any special treatment so much as we do to the fact that the plants were well ripened before being dug and the bulbs were fully matured. So anxious are we to receive the bulbs early that the Japanese dig the bulbs in a green state and this is the cause of dissatisfaction and irregular growth of these lilies.

Save some of your roots of astilbe until the first part of April and then pot them. The astilbe is such a hardy plant you can store it almost anywhere during the winter months. But covered with two or three inches of soil in a coldframe is better than leaving the roots in the cases they arrived in. Besides, there is the standard crop of flowers—roses, carnations and sweet peas. The latter should be in prime order at the end of May. You might sow some candytuft about the middle of March. Sow the latter in drills on a bench and when two or three inches high transplant to six inches apart on the bed or bench. If you have a bed of lily of the valley outside cover it with sash before the bells open. It will be a very different article from that exposed to rains. For flowering plants it is the season of plenty. Our zonal geraniums are in full flower, also the show pelargoniums. Fuchsias and some hydrangeas are worth keeping for this day.

STOCKS.

What course shall I pursue with stocks in order to have them bloom for Easter? My plants are now coming up. F. B. F.

If the strain of stocks is the ten weeks' variety I know of no better plan than to grow them along and shift when necessary on a light bench in a temperature of 50 degrees. If it is the Midlothian or any of the branching varieties, it will be difficult to get them into flower by Easter. You must be content to have them flower in April and May, when they will, I hope, pay you as cut flowers.

CARNATION SOCIETY EXHIBITS.

Some misunderstanding seems to exist regarding carnation exhibits coming to Toronto for the convention and exhibition of the American Carnation Society. Kindly give prominence to the following:

Those sending exhibits only require the tags and stickers furnished by Secretary Herr to insure their goods being delivered at the exhibition hall at Toronto without delay. Arrangements have been made with the Canadian customs officials to pass all goods bearing said tags and stickers. No other papers or valuation invoices are required by the customs officer. Shippers should write at once to Secretary Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa., for tags and stickers for as many boxes as they will send. No other precaution is necessary except to ship in time and wrap safely. We often have winter in Toronto.

GRAFTING.

Grafting of stock for indoor work is, year by year, becoming common and this is a sure sign that in the majority of cases the results have been satisfactory.

To be certain that grafted stock will be more remunerative than own root stock, in your own particular class of soil, it is well to make an experiment with both kinds, giving each a fair trial side by side before going to the expense of using grafted stock exclusively; as in many of the heavy soils own root stock seems to be quite as satisfactory, if not more so, than grafted stock.

We must also take into consideration the varieties we intend to grow, as some of our varieties, such as Beauty, Meteor, Chatenay and, possibly, Richmond, succeed best on their own roots.

In order to make a success of this method of grafting, the operator must provide himself with a suitable case in which to place the newly grafted stock immediately after the operation is completed and where they will have to remain until the stock and scion are united.

This case should be made practically air tight, covered with glass sashes, and should be piped, so that a minimum of 80 degrees can be maintained under any conditions of weather. By having the case air tight it gives the operator full control as regards temperature and moisture of the inside of the case, without which little success can be attained.

If the Manetti stocks have been properly cared for since they were potted in November they will now be in good condition for the grafting table. Stocks which have made good root action and have just begun to swell the buds are more satisfactory than those which have been allowed to break the buds and show an inch or two of growth. If there are any of those among the stocks the buds should be rubbed off and the plants set back into a cool temperature for a few days.

The selection of the scion should be made with even greater care than is usually exercised in the selection of wood for cuttings, having in view the relative size of the stock and the condition of growth. The scion should be, if possible, of well ripened wood, of a size nearly approaching the size of the stock, for reasons which will be apparent further on.

Those who contemplate grafting their own stock will find these and following remarks more useful and clear if they would take the trouble to visit some establishment where this method of propagation is being practiced. They can then apply the advice offered here with better results after a good object lesson.

NEW ROSES IN EUROPE.

Undoubtedly the rose of the year is the beautiful variety, Queen of Spain, says the London Garden. S. Bide & Sons, of Farnham, are to be congratulated upon this, their first introduction among roses, and as they have begun so well it is to be hoped they will continue to add to the collection roses of equal merit. Many who saw the variety when first staged at the National Rose Show thought it deserved a gold medal, and so it did. Mr. Bide, junior, informed the writer that Queen of Spain was raised from Antoine Rivoire crossed with another variety, but what that was he could not say. The color is pale flesh with a darker center, the tint being much intensified upon plants one year old. It possesses the valuable quality of erect stems, so that the handsome flowers are borne well above the foliage, a trait it inherits from its maternal parent. It has especially good, lasting flowers, a fact fully demonstrated by the freshness of the blooms at the end of the two days' show at Holland House. No one can deny that fully three-fourths of the novelties introduced at the present day are of a very flimsy character, although charming in color, and, as garden roses, they are excellent, but there is room for many more of the type of Queen of Spain.

Perhaps the second rose of the year is William Shean. It received the gold medal of the National Rose Society last July. I was assured that it was one of the best introductions of A. Dickson & Sons, of Newtownards. It is described as a large flower whose color is of varying shades of pink, from reddish pink in the center to palest pink in the outer petals. When opening the form is good. The fully expanded bloom is almost intermediate in form between La France and Caroline Testout. It is one of the big roses, the petals being immense, and it must prove a highly valuable sort. For vases and other decorative work such roses have a distinct value when they can be cut with extra long stems, and judging from the plant exhibited this seems possible with William Shean.

The third novelty of the year is of continental origin, and is known as Mme. Constant Soupert. It is an exquisite flower, somewhat pointed, with grand petals and beautiful form. The color is rich golden yellow, with a margin of bright rosy red to its petals. It is reputedly a cross between Souvenir de Pierre Notting and Duchesse Maria Salviati. Soupert & Notting, of Luxembourg, are the raisers.

Dora is a seedling from Antoine Rivoire. It has been splendidly exhibited, especially in pots, and I believe it has a great future. The color is a peach blossom tint, with deeper centers. Celia is another fine novelty, but will be valued more as a garden rose than an exhibition flower, although for this latter purpose it will prove useful by reason of its substantial blossoms and exquisite shape. It is a prodigious bloomer, and makes a thick bush, more vigorous, perhaps, than Grace Darling. The color is a soft satin pink. Both these were raised by William Paul & Son, of Waltham Cross.

OUTDOOR ROSES FOR CUTTING.

I wish to raise some roses to cut in the field and desire to know what kinds would give the best results in Maryland.
B. S.

Possibly the writer of the above may mean what class of roses is best for blooms outdoors, instead of what kinds. What are known as the hybrid perpetual class are the only truly hardy roses, but their season is short, the earliest blossoms opening about June 20, in this locality, and continuing to flower for a month. Six first-class varieties of this class are Ulrich Brunner, Paul Neyron, Magna Charta, Mme. Gabriel Luizet, Clio and John Hopper. This list could be greatly lengthened, and all worth growing if properly cultivated.

Plant dormant stock this coming spring, as soon as the ground is dry, and cut down to within a few eyes of the bud. Don't expect any great quantity of flowers the first summer. Be content with a strong growth, which, if cut down to within four or five eyes of the previous growth, will be sure to give you a grand burst of bloom the following summer. The first spring after planting the roses should have an abundance of water and a mulch of two or three inches of dairy manure to keep the surface of the ground from baking. Plantings of roses of these varieties should last for years if properly pruned. The trouble is, you are too much afraid to prune. After the second year, when you should get a full crop of flowers, you must prune every spring down to within three or four eyes of the previous year's growth. Straw-ing up the plants in winter does not amount to much and is not worth the labor. Rather spread six inches of stable manure around the base of the plant.

While on the subject of real hardy roses, I have often thought we ought to have a quantity of the ramblers, the Crimson Rambler, the Farquhar and Dorothy Perkins. What splendid material a branch of any of these ramblers would be for a decoration. All the pruning they need is to cut out the old wood that flowered last summer.

The tea, or truly ever-blooming roses, are not hardy and must be planted annually, but there is another class known as hybrid teas, some of which are satisfactory for summer blooming in our northern states. Best of all is Maman Cochet, the color of Bridesmaid, and its white form. These are especially worth cultivation and protection in winter. La France, Admiral Schley, Gruss an Teplitz, a fine crimson rose, President Carnot, Balduin and Etoile de Lyon and many more of this class could be recommended.

You are doubtless aware that roses of any class do not do well in a light, shallow, sandy soil and especially unfavorable is a worn-out old garden, however much manure you may add to the soil.

If you are growing these roses for cut flowers it will pay to disbud all of them, leaving only the strongest perfect bud; and if you can apply cold water at a pressure of thirty pounds to the square inch and apply it every morning, from the time the leaf buds break into growth until the blossom opens, you won't be bothered with aphis or any other enemy of the rose.

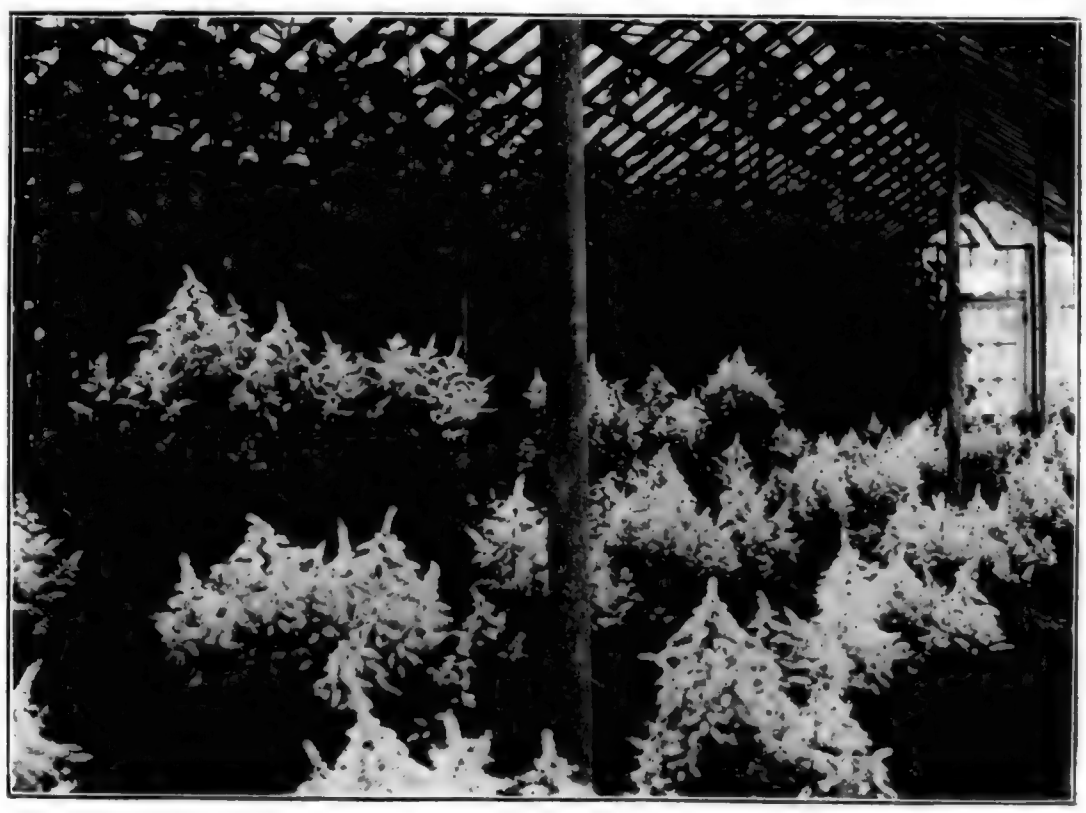
THE BERTERMANN PLANT.



The accompanying illustrations are from photographs taken at the new plant of the Bertermann Bros. Co., at Cumberland, a few miles outside of Indianapolis. One of the pictures gives a view of the exterior. Another shows a house of carnations, and the third shows a bench of poinsettias, which were cut for Christmas, and also a bench of Spiræa Gladstone, which also was sold at the holidays.

The Bertermann Bros. Co. finds Cumberland an excellent place for the growing end of the business. It is removed from the city, where land is cheap and soil both good and plentiful, but it is on the trolley line and connected with the city store by telephone so that it is but a matter of a few moments to get stock to the store if needed on short notice. The Bertermanns keep store in first-class style and to meet their demand the stock turned out at the greenhouses has to be a first-rate article.

FORCING DUTCH HYACINTHS.

Dutch hyacinths, grown single bulbs in 3-inch pots, are easy to handle, make exceptionally fine spikes and the labor bill is much reduced in comparison to the old method of growing in 5-inch pots and boxes. And what is of even greater value, the cost of heating, as grown in England, is reduced by one-half. They are treated in the same way as when growing in water in glasses.

Grown in this way for the London market, the bulbs are buried in the soil only about one-half an inch. They are placed in 80 to 85 degrees of heat and given an abundance of water. The house they occupy is matted down with three or four thicknesses, to the total exclusion of all light and, of course, serving to keep in practically all heat given off from the pipes. The bulbs are kept in these quarters until the spikes are developed some several inches from the bulbs and the foliage is a couple of inches high, when they are brought into the light, when a short time suffices for them to open the spike and gain their color and green foliage.

A heated shed would suit them just as well as a covered glass-house. The cost of treating them in this manner is slight, including labor, heating, house-room and all incidentals; hardly one farthing each, or £1 per thousand. The average cost of the bulbs to buy in from Holland is 70 shillings per thousand, making the total cost to place them on the market £4 10 shillings, and many thousands are disposed of at an average of £6 per thousand, which leaves a fair working profit. One nursery I recently visited was growing over 40,000 in this way and not one per cent was a failure.

DAHLIAS.

What is the proper time to propagate dahlias from cuttings? If they were propagated this winter would they make good plants and bloom well the coming summer? L. D.

You can propagate dahlias the first part of March and on through April and they will make the best of plants, bloom early and have fine flowers. Many growers prefer the plants from cuttings to the tubers or roots. Old roots are placed on a bench, where there is a little bottom heat, on an inch or so of soil, and a little soil is scattered on and between the roots. Soon eyes will break from the tops of the tubers. If these are cut off at a joint and inserted in 2-inch pots and the pots plunged in the propagating bed they will soon root.

NEPHROLEPIS EXALTATA SPORTS.

Nephrolepis exaltata Piersoni was distributed in the United States in 1903 as a splendid decomposite sport from the so-called Boston fern, and evoked great admiration as a decidedly fresh and promising brake. N. exaltata elegantissima followed, 1905, still more finely cut, and, finally, so far as present records are concerned, Messrs. Rochford (October 9, 1906) capped an apparent climax with the N. exaltata todeaoides, already described. In this connection it is a curious fact that ten or twelve years ago, long before Piersoni appeared, Mr. Roupell, of Roupell Park, sent the writer a number of bipinnate fronds of N. exaltata, all unfortunately barren, which had appeared on a normal plant in his locality. This plant, however, either reverted or was lost sight of in some way, for, despite our urgent advice to sow and our prediction (since verified) that a capacity thus indicated might be the forerunner of very fine decomposite types, nothing more was heard of the particular plant.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

WHEN TO PLANT ASTERS.

When should I plant asters for outdoor flowers? L. D.

The first planting of asters is usually done as soon as the ground is dry and friable and danger of severe frost is past. Ours is such a big country and has such wide degrees of latitude that no arbitrary date will answer. This query comes from Kansas, where winters are short and sharp and spring early. There is possibly as much difference in climate between Kansas and Minnesota as there is between Copenhagen and Madrid, or St. Petersburg and the Crimea, where the olive grows and fruits. From what we know of the climate of Kansas, should say anywhere after April 20 would be safe to plant asters. W. S.

Greenhouse Heating.

EXPANSION TANK.

In your valuable paper there often appears in your queries on heating the following question: How high shall I place my expansion tank above the highest point in the heating pipes, and to what part of the system shall I connect the same? The answer is almost always the same, i. e., place your tank ten or fifteen feet above the highest point and connect with the main return near the boiler.

Now, the writer has no desire to set at naught the advice given by your heating engineer. But, having had experience in hot water heating, under almost all conditions, for a number of years, he has never been able to see that it made any difference in the circulation, whether the expansion tank was ten inches or ten feet above the highest point. That is altogether a matter of convenience, and has no bearing upon the efficiency of the heating plant; so long as it is above the highest point and large enough to take care of the overflow, due to expansion in water through heating.

As to where the connection should be made, I have learned that it makes no difference whether it is with the main flow or main return, or any part of the boiler or pipes, as far as the circulation goes, with moderate firing.

Place your expansion tank above the highest point in the system, in the most convenient place, and connect with ½-inch galvanized pipe to any part of the boiler or pipes. When it is left as a matter of choice, I always take the pipe to the expansion tank from the top side of the most convenient main flow pipe I can get at. Coils fed from this pipe will work more smoothly in hard firing than when the aircocks alone are depended upon to keep the pipes free from air and steam, incidental to heavy firing. In fact the coils above the tank connection will rarely need opening, as everything passes out through the expansion tank, no matter how hard you fire, the water being left free to circulate unobstructed by steam or air. And you take no chance of steam gathering at the high points and backing your water out through the expansion tank, shutting off the circulation, as it sometimes does when your tank connection is on the return pipes, or near the bottom of the boiler, should the boiler be a little large for the work it has to do, and heats up to the steaming point, perhaps, when the fireman is not about to open aircocks. Any one doubting this can quickly be convinced by giving it a trial.

The only object the writer has in publishing this is, that it may come to the notice of some one who is at sea on this question. There is nothing more perplexing to the grower than a faulty heating system—and the woods are full of them.

TROUBLE WITH HEATING.

In reading S. C. Templin's heating record in the Review of December 20, I could not help but think of the difference between his case and my own.

I have a northeast and southwest house 40x100, with a combination of a short-span and a long-span roof; southwest gable glazed. Along the northeast end is a potting shed thirty-seven feet, leaving three feet exposed to the northwest. The west wall has 20-inch glass, with a few ventilators. The east wall has 30-inch glass, also a few ventilators; continual ventilation on top on east and west sides. The height of the house is twelve feet.

There are six 4-inch flows under the benches and ten 4-inch returns; five open expansion tanks on the farther end. The flows when leaving the main rise about ten inches, then run to the farther end with another rise of ten inches. There are two boilers, but the work is not satisfactory.

When the mercury shows 10 degrees above zero outside, with a good breeze, the thermometer in the southwest end registers about 42 degrees, the northeast about 50 degrees. Last winter I could not get the pipes on the west side to get warm, while the east side were boiling, although they are level; so I put a valve in the main and took an outlet from the flow above the boiler and keep the valve closed. It heats fairly well now, but there is quite a difference yet. I also put in a valve between the first boiler and the main flow and keep it half closed. I use only one outlet from the first for flow, but take one branch on the top of the boiler, so the nine pipes west of the valve, in the main flow, have the other boiler and one branch from the first to feed them.

I had several men examine the system and they all disagreed as to the trouble. Are there enough pipes in the house? The boiler pit is eight feet deep and 16x20, but the heat is unbearable in a cold snap. How can I get the farther end hot enough, when the returns are hot near the boilers? J. A.

The piping in your houses is ample to maintain a temperature of 70 degrees. It is evident that the circulation is too tardy. It is possible that by installing a circulating pump you could greatly improve conditions. But I think that another plan may help, i. e., calk up the open expansion tanks and replace them by elevated expansion tanks connected to the system close to the boilers on the main returns. This will give you some pressure if the tanks are elevated ten or twelve feet and will tend to improve conditions. As I do not have the capacity of the boilers I can not advise in regard to the provision you have made for heating. L. C. C.

BOILER CAPACITY.

How many square feet of radiation will a thirty-five horse-power boiler heat, using steam. S. & B.

If your boiler is a horizontal tubular boiler, brick set, and is rated at thirty-five horse-power, it should heat about 4,000 square feet of radiation. If it is a locomotive type it should not be loaded with more than 3,000 square feet of pipe or radiation. L. C. C.

A CONTEMPLATED HOUSE.

Kindly tell me how to heat a greenhouse, walled in with cement blocks, 29x100 inside measurement, the rafters resting on the walls and no glass in the sides. Would you use cypress or iron rafters? The whole thing, including benches, will be cement, iron and glass, provided you recommend iron rafters. What horse-power boiler should I use? W. A. L.

If you use hot water you should secure a boiler rated to carry about 1,500 square feet of radiation. The piping can be arranged with 2-inch black pipe, using sixteen runs the length of the house, which can be arranged in three or four manifolds. If four manifolds of four pipes each are used one pipe in each coil should be a supply and three returns. If steam is used a 3-inch flow under the ridge, returning through sixteen 1¼-inch pipes, arranged under the benches, will be sufficient. A steam boiler with 150 square feet of heating surface exposed to the action of the fire will be large enough for this one house. With the construction you are using, if not too expensive, should use the U-bars now upon the market, otherwise I should use cypress. In a house with cement walls now under construction I am using cypress gutters and sashbars. L. C. C.

MORE PIPE NEEDED.

I have an east and west house, 21x101, sides six feet high, eleven feet to the ridge, all good and tight. I have two 2-inch overhead pipes, and four 1½-inch flows under each bench. My boiler, twelve or fourteen horse-power, is at the east end of the house and twenty feet south. Have I enough pipe to maintain 60 or 70 degrees temperature in zero weather. F. W. P.

I regret to state that from the data given it is impossible to say whether or not the house in question is sufficiently piped. It would appear that there are only eight 1½-inch pipes used under the benches. There is no statement to indicate whether steam or hot water is used, although the wording of the letter and the size of pipes mentioned would indicate steam.

If steam is used then fourteen 1½-inch pipes would furnish sufficient radiation with five pounds pressure to maintain 70 degrees during severe weather. If hot water is used two 2½-inch flow pipes should be used and eighteen 2-inch returns under the benches. L. C. C.

William E. Hielscher.

WM. E. HIELSCHER.

Detroit is the home of many enterprising and energetic young men, among whom none is more thoroughly earnest than William E. Hielscher, who is engaged in building up a manufactory of wire work. He started in business a few years ago, with almost nothing at all, and now is the possessor of a profitable and steadily increasing business, built up by strict attention to details until it gives employment to a number of wire workers.

Mr. Hielscher began his career in the employ of John Petzhoti, who was a pioneer in wire making in Detroit. About three years ago Mr. Hielscher started for himself. He is an active member of the Detroit Florists' Club and well liked by the trade. He has a modern equipment, including machinery for making loops and other small standard parts of wire frames, and besides wire designs the firm also makes iron fences, railings, signs, etc., one example of the latter being the attractive sign of the Bemb Floral Co., Detroit. Mr. Hielscher is at work on a new catalogue and it is his purpose to extend his business so that it shall take in not only Detroit and nearby towns but the whole territory tributary to Detroit. H. S.

GLADIOLUS THE BRIDE.

In your issue of December 20 W. S. asks some one to give information about forcing Gladiolus The Bride. The following remarks will, I hope, furnish the clue to success:

The corms of this gladiolus are small and it is customary to plant them somewhat thickly, usually in flats, with three to four inches of soil, usually light, sandy loam. Treated in this manner the growths push up thickly and all goes well till March. Then we notice that the leaves begin to get yellow at the tips and whole growths turn yellow, and we further notice that every time we look at them the flats are dry. It seems almost impossible to keep them wet. Things go from bad to worse; red spider finishes the job and a few measly, sickly spikes reward us for our trouble. This has been my experience and that of many others.

Of course we blame the bulbs. I have planted them in carnation benches, one bulb only between plants, and the result has been fine, strong spikes and plenty of them; but my respect for the carnation has increased to such a degree that I would never again be guilty of such sacrilege.

I have noticed, in growing them outside, that corms planted in heavy loam do better than those in light soil, and bulbs planted in the fall are much superior to those put in during March. Try them, W. S., in eight inches of soil, rose soil, in boxes. Plant them at least three inches apart, and don't forget a little liquid manure when the spikes are forming. Plant three inches deep. When flowering is over put under the benches until the foliage is dry. By removing the top two inches of soil and renewing with rich compost you can get a large crop the second season, but don't try it a third time. The corms increase so rapidly that starvation is sure to occur.

If you want early flowers, plant in September. There is no need to put them outside like Dutch bulbs. As long as the temperature of your house does not exceed 55 degrees at night you will be all right. Don't attempt to grow them under the benches. Just as soon as the young growth appears they need the full light.

I have often thought of writing a personal letter of thanks to W. S. for his many useful suggestions and timely reminders — reminders which save me a great deal of hard thinking, and I take this opportunity of expressing my sense of gratitude. I also feel delighted at being able to impart a few small items of information to one who is never backward in distributing to his brother florists the results of his many years of study. Edw. Alex. Wallace.

Columbia City, Ind.—Albert Wagoner has moved his greenhouse to his twenty-five-acre farm just west of the city. The new house is 21x100 and a steam heating plant with a forty horsepower boiler is being installed. He will make a specialty of carnations.

BOSTON.

The Market.

There is no special change to be noted from a week ago. On occasional days there is a brisk market, but on the whole it has been slow, with plenty of material to go around.

American Beauty continues to bring good prices, as do the best grades of Richmond or Bride, Maid and other teas. From $4 to $12 are ruling prices. Some good Killarney are seen and this rose maintains its popularity with the buying public. Wellesley is also seen, of excellent quality on long stems. Carnations are not in heavy supply and as a consequence prices have kept up well. Violets are quite abundant, single average rather more than double and bring about $1 per hundred.

Building of Johnson Seed Co., Philadelphia.

Callas are not plentiful at $1.50 a dozen. Lilium Harrisii sells at similar prices. Some good freesia sells at $3 and upwards. In bulbous stock Paper Whites and Romans are abundant. Tulips are improving, La Reine being mostly in evidence. Some double as well as single daffodils are coming in. Mignonette is good and so are anthericums; the latter, however, do not sell very well. A few white chrysanthemums still arrive, but they are getting small. There is no special change in green stock.

Massachusetts Horticultural Society.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, January 5, announcement was made of a legacy of $3,000 from the late Charles E. French, the income to be devoted to prizes for meritorious varieties of fruits and vegetables; also one of $5,000, the income of which will be for premiums for flowers. A committee of five was appointed to secure a list of special prizes for the November show. It was stated that several had already been secured.

Charles E. Richardson, for over fifteen years treasurer of the society, resigned and his resignation was accepted. Walter Hunnewell was appointed treasurer and William P. Rich secretary, librarian and general hall superintendent. The annual inaugural meeting of the society attracted a large number of members. General Stephen M. Weld, the newly elected president, in his address stated that the running expenses of the society continued to exceed the income and either expenses must be reduced or income increased, the latter the better remedy. The average expenses for the last four years was $22,042.32. The sums received from rentals of the hall in 1906 exceeded that of 1905 by $3,000 and this will probably be materially increased in succeeding years, as the hall becomes more and more in the center of the city.

The treasurer's report showed an excess of assets over all liabilities of $788,280. The membership of the society is 852. The reports of the chairmen of the several committees were read and adopted. It was stated that there had been some demand to have the library open evenings and on Sunday afternoons and a committee was appointed to consider and report on this matter at a succeeding meeting.

The lecture course opens January 12, with a talk from J. Woodward Manning on "The Iris and Its Culture." The remaining lectures are as follows:

Farquhar will furnish one of his excellent stereopticon lectures; on this occasion "Italian Gardens" will be chiefly spoken of. There will be music and refreshments and, as it is ladies' night, an attendance of 300 is expected.

The enforcement of the new so-called blue laws is stirring up members of the trade in Boston. While it is adjudged permissible to make up funeral designs and other work of necessity on Sunday, stores must not be opened for a general transaction of business. Already several florists have been fined for attempting to do this. While the present rigid enforcement may not be continued, it will undoubtedly work hardship on many who counted Sunday one of their best days. There has been, however, too much Sunday selling and if store keepers would all confine their operations to six days and rest on the seventh they would be much better off in every way.

A. H. Fewkes and Paul E. Richwagen are among those who are just recovering from attacks of the grip.

Farquhar & Co. will distribute seeds of any novelties secured of E. H. Wilson, who has just left on his third expedition to western China, this time under the auspices of the Arnold Arboretum.

Among others who are bringing in extra fine freesia are S. J. Goddard, Tailby & Son and Frank T. White.

John J. Fee is bringing some fine tulips and narcissi.

William Patterson, of Wollaston, has good double Von Sions.

H. N. Eaton is last in the market with mums and still brings in some nice blooms.

Thomas F. Galvin will occupy the basement under the Music hall flower market as a storeroom.

J. J. Butterworth states that the call for cattleyas and other orchids is so good that his flowers are practically all sold before they open. His Cattleya Trianae are now good.

James Silman, of Waltham, will use automobiles in lieu of teams the coming spring and will dispose of all his teams.

The landscape gardening classes of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club continue to prove very popular, being largely attended each evening.

E. W. Wood, of West Newton, whose decease occurred on the closing day of 1906, was a familiar figure at Horticultural hall and had been chairman of the fruit committee for many years. His two sons, Elijah A. Wood, of West Newton, and W. K. Wood, of Chicago, are each well known to the trade and the sympathy of many horticulturists goes out to them in their bereavement.

THE DEATH ROLL.

George Gunderman.

George Gunderman, landscape gardener, of Pittsburg, Pa., died January 1, aged 88 years. He is survived by one daughter, eleven grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren.

Frederick Vervaene.

One of the oldest florists and landscape gardeners in Bridgeport, Conn., died December 30, aged 70 years, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Thomas Owens. Frederick Vervaene was born in Ghent, Belgium. After serving an apprenticeship in the horticultural gardens there he came to this country and entered the employ of Nathaniel Wheeler, of Bridgeport. Later he entered business for himself, but experiencing financial reverses in the '70s he sold out and went to Troy, N. Y., where he had charge of the grounds of the James Townsend Burden estate. Later he had charge of the estate of C. P. Huntington at Throg's Neck, N. Y. On the death of Mr. Huntington Mr. Vervaene returned to Bridgeport and resumed his occupation. Being a widower, he made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Owens. It is said that many successful florists in Bridgeport owe their success, in a measure, to Mr. Vervaene's tuition. A cancer of the jaw was the cause of his death. He leaves three daughters and two sons, as follows: Mrs. John Hall, Mrs. Thomas Owens, Mrs. John Vickers, Samuel Vervaene and Joseph Vervaene, who is in the United States army.

Mrs. Elizabeth Collin.

Mrs. Elizabeth Collin, widow of Charles Collin, who was a gardener and florist, died December 31, after being unconscious several days from a stroke of paralysis.

George Johnson.

George Johnson, who was in the employ of the Storrs & Harrison Co., at Painesville, O., died last week. The funeral was held from the residence, at the nursery, December 24, and was largely attended by the nursery employees and people of the city.

GLADIOLUS THE BRIDE.

In your issue of December 20 W. S. asks some one to give information about forcing Gladiolus The Bride. The following remarks will, I hope, furnish the clue to success:

The corms of this gladiolus are small and it is customary to plant them somewhat thickly, usually in flats, with three to four inches of soil, usually light, sandy loam. Treated in this manner the growths push up thickly and all goes well till March. Then we notice that the leaves begin to get yellow at the tips and whole growths turn yellow, and we further notice that every time we look at them the flats are dry. It seems almost impossible to keep them wet. Things go from bad to worse; red spider finishes the job and a few measly, sickly spikes reward us for our trouble. This has been my experience and that of many others.

Of course we blame the bulbs. I have planted them in carnation benches, one bulb only between plants, and the result has been fine, strong spikes and plenty of them; but my respect for the carnation has increased to such a degree that I would never again be guilty of such sacrilege.

I have noticed, in growing them outside, that corms planted in heavy loam do better than those in light soil, and bulbs planted in the fall are much superior to those put in during March. Try them, W. S., in eight inches of soil, rose soil, in boxes. Plant them at least three inches apart, and don't forget a little liquid manure when the spikes are forming. Plant three inches deep. When flowering is over put under the benches until the foliage is dry. By removing the top two inches of soil and renewing with rich compost you can get a large crop the second season, but don't try it a third time. The corms increase so rapidly that starvation is sure to occur.

If you want early flowers, plant in September. There is no need to put them outside like Dutch bulbs. As long as the temperature of your house does not exceed 55 degrees at night you will be all right. Don't attempt to grow them under the benches. Just as soon as the young growth appears they need the full light.

I have often thought of writing a personal letter of thanks to W. S. for his many useful suggestions and timely reminders — reminders which save me a great deal of hard thinking, and I take this opportunity of expressing my sense of gratitude. I also feel delighted at being able to impart a few small items of information to one who is never backward in distributing to his brother florists the results of his many years of study. Edw. Alex. Wallace.

BOSTON.

The Market.

There is no special change to be noted from a week ago. On occasional days there is a brisk market, but on the whole it has been slow, with plenty of material to go around.

American Beauty continues to bring good prices, as do the best grades of Richmond or Bride, Maid and other teas. From $4 to $12 are ruling prices. Some good Killarney are seen and this rose maintains its popularity with the buying public. Wellesley is also seen, of excellent quality on long stems. Carnations are not in heavy supply and as a consequence prices have kept up well. Violets are quite abundant, single average rather more than double and bring about $1 per hundred.

Callas are not plentiful at $1.50 a dozen. Lilium Harrisii sells at similar prices. Some good freesia sells at $3 and upwards. In bulbous stock Paper Whites and Romans are abundant. Tulips are improving, La Reine being mostly in evidence. Some double as well as single daffodils are coming in. Mignonette is good and so are anthericums; the latter, however, do not sell very well. A few white chrysanthemums still arrive, but they are getting small. There is no special change in green stock.

Massachusetts Horticultural Society.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, January 5, announcement was made of a legacy of $3,000 from the late Charles E. French, the income to be devoted to prizes for meritorious varieties of fruits and vegetables; also one of $5,000, the income of which will be for premiums for flowers. A committee of five was appointed to secure a list of special prizes for the November show. It was stated that several had already been secured.

Charles E. Richardson, for over fifteen years treasurer of the society, resigned and his resignation was accepted. Walter Hunnewell was appointed treasurer and William P. Rich secretary, librarian and general hall superintendent. The annual inaugural meeting of the society attracted a large number of members. General Stephen M. Weld, the newly elected president, in his address stated that the running expenses of the society continued to exceed the income and either expenses must be reduced or income increased, the latter the better remedy. The average expenses for the last four years was $22,042.32. The sums received from rentals of the hall in 1906 exceeded that of 1905 by $3,000 and this will probably be materially increased in succeeding years, as the hall becomes more and more in the center of the city.

The treasurer's report showed an excess of assets over all liabilities of $788,280. The membership of the society is 852. The reports of the chairmen of the several committees were read and adopted. It was stated that there had been some demand to have the library open evenings and on Sunday afternoons and a committee was appointed to consider and report on this matter at a succeeding meeting.

The lecture course opens January 12, with a talk from J. Woodward Manning on "The Iris and Its Culture." The remaining lectures are as follows:

January 19, "Peach Growing Possibilities in New England," by A. A. Hixon.

January 26, "The Collecting of Orchids," by John E. Lager, Summit, N. J.

February 2, "The Renovation of an Old Orchard," by Geo. T. Powell, New York.

February 9, "The Home Vegetable Garden," by John W. Duncan, Jamaica Plains.

February 16, "Certain Uses of the School Garden," by Miss Anna Withington, Boston.

February 23, "Forestry from a Commercial Standpoint," by Prof. F. W. Rane, Boston.

March 2, "Planting for Streets and Waysides," by John A. Pettigrew, Boston.

March 9, "Some Bacterial Diseases of Plants: Their Nature and Treatment," by Prof. H. H. Wetzel, Ithaca, N. Y.

March 30, "Gardens of Italy," with stereopticon illustrations, by J. K. M. L. Farquhar, Boston.

A French firm bought orchids from a Belgian grower, making selection from a number of colored plates. When the plants bloomed they did not come up to the promise of the pictures. Now, after two and a half years of litigation the buyer has secured his money back, with costs.

There is a heavy demand for stock for fern dishes and prospect for a shortage before spring.

Shippers will find it worth while to send a postal-card to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., for a copy of Circular No. 47, "Strength of Packing Boxes of Various Woods."

A. F. Faulkner, who wrote the Review's Washington, D. C., news letter in 1906, having removed from that city, the Review would like to hear from some young man who has "a nose for news" to take up the work.

The Review is in receipt of several letters endorsing the sentiments expressed in Mr. Skidelsky's paper on credits published last week, especially that part relating to the desirability of the trade honoring drafts and answering communications regarding overdue accounts.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Using Tobacco Stems.

I think it will interest the readers of the Review to know my way of fumigating with tobacco stems. I have small V-shaped iron troughs, with 4-inch sides, and two feet long. I put fresh stems in the sun or over the boiler to dry and then chop them up quite fine with a spade, or a small feed cutter, which is better, as they do not have to be so dry. I then fill the troughs rounding full and set on fire, opening a small place at one end and pouring in a little kerosene oil to start them.

The stems in the troughs will burn ten or twelve hours and kill every greenfly in the house. I can use it with roses, chrysanthemums and carnations in full bloom and not hurt or bleach a bloom in the least. You cannot see the smoke at all, but it is strong enough, with the long duration.

I use three troughs to a house 18x100. It takes a little practice to get the stems just right, but when learned it is easily done and I think it is just as good and much cheaper than the different preparations for the same purpose.

The Weekly Florists' Review

As experience is the best teacher, so do we learn fastest by an exchange of experiences. Many valuable points are brought out by discussion.

Good penmanship, spelling and grammar, though desirable, are not necessary. Write as you would talk when doing your best.

WE SHALL BE GLAD TO HEAR FROM YOU.

The Real Violet Grower.

Please be so kind as to spare room for these few words with reference to the "violet men up the state," as was printed in the Review of December 27. Of course there are quite a few of us up here, as well as there are wholesale and retail dealers in the city of New York, and to get horns crossed would make quite a mix-up. But it certainly is laughable when one reads in our good paper, the Review, how every violet grower is an aristocrat and even the beginners with their two or three 100-foot houses put by enough money in the winter to take a trip to Europe and build another house or two for the next season.

Make a canvass around the majority of our beginners for five years back and see if they are enjoying their summers in Europe, or working at home instead. If we don't keep our eyes wide open we will not have profit enough to build extra houses. We don't dispute the fact that we do build houses, but how many in our county have their places mortgaged to the chimney-tops? And the only way we go to Europe is to take a run down the Hudson to the brickyards to buy bricks to rebuild, as houses don't last forever.

There are two sides to this question of violet culture. One is the wealth found in books and the other is wealth from hard, tedious work and constant watchfulness, and money coming in only half the year to cover the expense of the whole year. In July and August, when the sun is quite warm, you can come around and catch the violet growers working to beat Paddy's pig, making the plants grow. So don't put the credit in the wrong place. Alex A. Laub.

An Appreciative Grower.

It won't hurt you to know that the Review is the most appreciated publication that comes to my place, and I think that one article alone, "The Craft and the Craftsman," is worth much more than the price of the paper for one year.

Can you name a white carnation that is as good in size of flower and stiffness of stem as Enchantress? My Lieut. Peary and Wolcott have weak stems and small flowers, some shrivel up before they are quite open. Robert Craig is a perfect red in size, stem and color, but not so prolific as Victory and Haines. Harry Fenn is the most perfect crimson in every way. The four different Lawsons don't do so well; there are too many burst ones. Mrs. Patten is much better than Variegated Lawson, and Glendale is perfect in that color. The cloudy, wet weather retarded the blooming of carnations the last three weeks and kept me from supplying the demand, even at double the usual price. A. Woerner.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

There was excellent business the latter half of last week and no word of complaint was heard, except from buyers who thought prices were unseasonably high. Both city and shipping demand was good, although some of the retailers say they did not do so much business in the first week of January as they did a year ago. There was some superb stock in the market, of both roses and carnations; surprisingly good when one considers the weeks without sun. Roses held their values better than did any other item. There are plenty of Beauty and some remarkably fine Bride and Maid, also Richmond and Killarney. These held up to 20 and 25 cents per hundred last week.

This week opened with two days of rain, which naturally had its effect on the trade. Supplies are large and consequently prices have weakened materially, but it will require only a couple of days of seasonable weather, clear and cold, to tone up the market and put prices back where they were. The best roses have not lost much in value and even the shortest bring more money than at this time last year. Carnations are of superlative quality with many growers and the fancy stock fetches good money. There is a large demand for funeral work, the health department reporting a higher death rate than at any time in ten years, and it has provided an outlet for the white carnations, which have been slow sale since crops increased.

The bottom has fallen out of the violet market, at least temporarily. For this week not very heavy receipts are ample to meet the needs of the trade and leave some to be jobbed off when stale. Harrisii and callas are more abundant. There are now considerable numbers of tulips, but with many growers the stems are so short that they are sending in bulb and all, and one grower on Monday shipped his stock, flats and all, in which way it sold well. There are increased supplies of sweet peas. Poinsettias still are seen and sell slowly.

It is reported that bunched greens are becoming scarce, but there continue to be abundant supplies of fine strings of asparagus and smilax.

The turn in the weather came Wednesday, after the above market report was in type. It is cold and clear. The result doubtless will be to shorten stock for a couple of days, after which the plants will catch their winter stride and cuts will be both larger and of better quality. Good weather also will stimulate the demand.

Indications of Progress.

One of the things entailed by advertising and a large business is a large correspondence, and prompt answers to all business letters, and a large correspondence necessitates the use of a typewriter. As an indication of the fact that most of the wholesale florists are doing a large business is the fact that a large proportion of the houses now send out their letters typewritten. George Reinberg is the latest to install a machine and operator. Some of the houses which have no machines have arrangements with a public stenographer to come in every afternoon, take the dictation and transcribe the letters in the stenographer's own office, delivering them ready for signature before evening. It is a very convenient way.

Why Crops Were Late.

Why Christmas rose crops were not as great as growers, and buyers, would have liked is shown by the records of the weather bureau. In December there were only three clear days, eight on which the sun shone a little while, and twenty cloudy days. At the same time it rained on eleven days, a total precipitation of 2.46 inches, or more than in any December in eleven years.

Taking the whole year, 1906, there were only 102 clear days, 128 partly cloudy and 135 on which there was no sun.

Club Doings.

The Chicago Florists' Club gives every promise of renewed activity under the leadership of H. N. Bruns. At the meeting tonight he will announce his committees. The Toronto convention of the American Carnation Society, January 22 to 24, will be up for discussion. Mr. Bruns has informally announced that P. J. Hauswirth will be chairman of the club's transportation committee, so that an early report on Toronto may be forthcoming. Plans will be discussed for a club carnation show in February.

Various Notes.

Otto Benthey, the grower for the Benthey-Coatsworth Co., at New Castle, who has had such excellent results with Killarney, says that he gives Killarney no special treatment and that anyone can grow it who grows good Brides and Maids. He gives it exactly the same treatment as his Brides and Maids.

C. L. Washburn has returned from a week's rest at West Baden, Ind. His son, E. L. Washburn, has resumed his studies at Madison.

Louis Gresenz, of Bassett & Washburn, has been ill this week.

Wm. Fluegge, the Morton Grove carnation grower, was in town Monday and said that he had just visited E. H. Blameuser, at Niles Center, and that the latter's house of Rose-pink Enchantress is a sight to delight any grower's eye. It is the sport which originated with Mr. Blameuser, not the Detroit one several are growing.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. will have chrysanthemums for another week, probably a later date than chrysanthemums ever before have been offered in this market.

Be it recorded that Frank Williams paid 20 cents each for Maids January 5. Twelve were enough.

Tim Waters has left the Central Floral Co. to become general utility man for Vaughan & Sperry, who have in him a man capable of turning his hand to any detail of the flower business. Mr. Waters had years of experience in the wholesale business at Boston and is up to date in the retail business. He will spend a portion of his time on the road.

C. W. McKellar has been showing a nice lot of Calanthe Veitchii and says the leading stores are using it with splendid effect in dinner-table decorations.

Joe Beaver is no longer with Lubliner & Trinz.

Matt Evert is preparing to go quite largely into rooted cuttings for spring, carnations and especially chrysanthemums.

W. N. Rudd is growing practically none of the standard varieties of carnations and his stock as seen at Winterson's is superb. He has a light pink seedling that will likely be put on the market and also a white that will be heard from in due course.

It appears that Chicago's delegation to the Carnation Society's convention will be of pretty good size. Among those who will go will be August Poehlmann, P. J. Hauswirth, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Kill, L. Coatsworth, W. N. Rudd, representatives of the Joliet companies, and others.

The Flower Growers' Co. held its annual meeting January 3. Officers were reëlected as follows: President, Emil Buettner; vice-president, Walter Tonner; treasurer, F. R. Hills; secretary, Alex. Henderson; manager, Percy Jones. The utmost satisfaction was expressed with the business of last year.

E. C. Amling's place is being repainted throughout. Mr. Amling says the business of 1906 not only was his best record but ahead of his most sanguine expectations. He sees no reason why 1907 should not show continued progress, but says he will have no word of fault to find if it is only as good as 1906.

One of the week's visitors was Wilfrid Wheeler, of Concord, Mass.

Bert Budlong says it is noteworthy the general high quality of roses in view of the almost total absence of sun for two months. He says the J. A. Budlong crop missed Christmas by about two weeks and is now heavy. The quality is fine. Phil Schupp, manager of the store, reports prices last week averaging about a cent above those of the same week last year, and that, with the heavy crop, speaks well for the general state of trade.

C. M. Dickinson, at E. H. Hunt's, where they handle large quantities of insecticides, especially To-bak-ine products, says it is noticeable that practically all growers are now using the liquid form of nicotine to the practical exclusion of all other fumigants.

The new pink rose, Joe Hill, as seen at the establishment of Wietor Bros., is a fine thing. They will plant it in much larger quantity next season.

The George Wittbold Co. reports a splendid sale on small ferns for fern dishes. They had an enormous stock at the opening of the season, but are now well cleaned out, long before the demand will cease.

The A. L. Randall Co. reports the December business most satisfactory and January starting off ahead of last year. This is for cut flowers. The supply department is not yet old enough to afford any comparisons, the stock being only now complete.

Darby, a well-known character in the market, is in the county hospital as a result of a street car accident. He was badly hurt.

A big rose garden is to be planted at Humboldt Park.

Thomas McAllister is now with the Fleischman Floral Co., at the North State street store.

H. N. Bruns has 795 cases of valley pips in cold storage, so it does not look as though there would be any scarcity

The Holiday Trade.

The holiday trade was the best ever known in this locality. Prices were better on cut flowers, but the supply was inadequate. Carnations, as usual, were in greatest demand, one florist reporting that he could have sold 2,000 more at retail. Enchantress, Robert Craig, and Victory brought best prices.

Various Notes.

J. W. Minnott & Son are cutting extra fine Enchantress in their new carnation house.

A. W. Dyer, proprietor of the Flower Box, had a fine show of Christmas novelties.

J. J. Boyle, of the Portland Floral Co., has purchased the store formerly occupied by Mr. Ward, on Congress street.

J. O. Elwell, of Kennebunk, has recently erected a large Lord & Burnham house to meet the demands of his growing business. It will be largely devoted to bedding plants.

G. L. Mahoney & Co., of Saco, purpose to erect a modern carnation house in the spring.

Dennett reports the best season since the store opened. Evergreen roping was scarce and several good orders were refused for lack of material.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade has been fairly active during the last week and since the Christmas holidays it may be classed as good. New Year's trade was surprising to some of the florists, who say they were kept busy New Year's eve preparing orders for early morning delivery.

This week will be a busy one in society, with weddings, dinners, and two large balls. One is the Imperial, the society event of the season, of which Youngs have the decorations; the other event should keep the west end trade busy supplying extra fancy stock, which this trade demands. The downtown florists also have a good word for business since the holidays.

In looking over the stock at the different wholesale houses you find roses quite plentiful, with the bulk of them of poor quality. Extra fancy Beauties are somewhat scarce. The medium grades are mostly deformed blooms. Prices on all grades are down.

Carnations are keeping up well in quality and supply. Some fine Enchantress come in. Lawson does not seem so good this season. Whites are always in demand. Prices are not so high as last week.

Violets hung around the $1 mark until Saturday, when the market became flooded with Californias and the price dropped to 50 cents per hundred. A drop from this price is looked for this week.

Romans and Paper Whites are, as usual, at this season of the year, plenty for all demands. Lily of the valley is not so good of late, calla lilies not so many. There are plenty of fine greens in the market.

Various Notes.

Frank A. Weber, of H. G. Weber & Son's nursery, left the last week for an extended trip east on business.

D. Augspurger, of D. U. Augspurger & Sons, of Peoria, Ill., spent a day here last week.

The Ellison Floral Co. has quite a number of fashionable decorations for balls, weddings and dinners booked for this month.

The Michel Plant & Bulb Co., on Maryland avenue, under the management of Charles Connon, reports an excellent trade since New Year's.

A. J. Bentzen, of the Bentzen Floral Co., did a great plant business during the holidays and says business has kept up since.

M. J. Kern, one of our oldest landscape gardeners, has returned to the city for a few months' stay. He is a regular visitor at the Park View nursery, where he found William Bouche is head landscape artist.

Carew Sanders, one of our oldest florists, has recovered from his recent sickness, which is good news among the trade. Mr. Sanders is a cousin to the much beloved Edgar Sanders of Chicago.

Henry Ostertag, of Ostertag Bros., has been kept busy since January 1 with decorations for fashionable events.

Report has it, that William Adles, formerly with Mrs. M. M. Ayers on Grand avenue, is now located in Chicago.

Himmer Bros., of Meramec Highlands, are in the market with thousands of extra fine California violets.

Heller Bros., of New Castle, Ind., are regular shippers to this market, at Angermueller's, which helped the trade out greatly during the holidays.

L. Baumann, of Chicago, is in town this week.

James North & Co., who ran an office at Thirteenth and Pine, selling designs to the shipping trade, will this week open a retail store at Van der Venter and Frimey avenues.

W. C. Smith & Co. received a large shipment of wild smilax last week, which will come in handy for some of those large decorations for this week.

F. W. Ude and William Winter, of Kirkwood, and James Dunford, of Clayton, are sending in extra quality of stock to H. G. Berning, for which demand is good.

At C. A. Kuehn's, Weber & Sons' and Ammann's roses are in demand. The carnations from H. Baer's, Peoria, and Peterson's, Gibson City, Ill., are of fine quality. All of our wholesalers say a great glut of violets will be on this week, if the fine weather keeps up.

W. C. Young, who was the St. Louis Florists' Club's choice for state vice-president at Dayton, reports that he is preparing plans, this early, for an enjoyable trip to Philadelphia for the club members. He is also on the right side of the railroads for a low rate.

Paper Whites keep moving at $3 per hundred. Some early French Trumpet Majors are in and $3 per hundred is the average price. Stevia is getting scarce and the price has advanced. Plenty of good smilax and other green goods are on the market.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The first week of January, 1907, has been marked by extraordinary climatic conditions, the weather sometimes damp and cloudy, at other times clear and sunny, resembling spring far more than midwinter. These conditions, immediately succeeding the activity of the holidays, has caused a depression in the cut flower market. There has not been the snap to business that might reasonably be expected with the amount of entertaining now in progress incident to the short season. Some of the stock coming in town has suffered seriously, owing, probably, to the extra heat to which the plants have been subjected before the unlooked-for warm spell. Violets have felt the unfavorable conditions more, perhaps, than any other flowers. Beauties have shortened considerably. There s evidence that a sharp cold spell would decimate the cut now coming into the city. Tea roses have suffered from the warm weather, their color and texture not being up to standard. Carnations have fallen a little in price. They are fairly plentiful and some magnificent flowers are seen. The additions to the list are Trumpet Major, which can now be had in quantity; freesia, Campernelles, and white lilac; the last named can be had in quantity from now on, until the close of the social season. A noticeable feature in the market conditions is the increase in the quantity of gardenias. They are now very fine and plentiful. The demand for greens has received an impetus from the decorators, who are using strings of smilax and asparagus in quantity.

A Coming Fern.

The plant market of the world, and more especially of this country, is never so crowded with good stock that there is not room at the top for really meritorious novelties. When the Boston fern was introduced, no one would have believed that so many good varieties, springing from this popular favorite, would be found and accepted in so short a time. Yet five successors have each in its turn been welcomed as having some distinct advantage over the parent variety. It remains for the present year to see the introduction of another sport from the nephrolepis family that bids fair to easily eclipse all the older varieties.

Through the courtesy of Wm. P. Craig, Phil was invited to see Nephrolepis Amerpohlii growing in a house on the Robt. Craig Co.'s place at Forty-ninth and Market streets. This beautiful fern seems destined to play a most important part, both as a plant and as a green for cutting. The fronds are large, full, and are exquisite as a piece of lace, the under side being almost as beautiful as the upper. Mr. Craig has been fortunate in securing one-half the stock of this promising novelty, whica he will distribute next fall. The experience gained in growing Boston ferns some years ago is being turned to good account in the soil used for the new variety, the sturdy and rapid growth of the plants bearing evidence to their enjoyment of the surroundings.

It may be that the readers of this column will think that Phil's opinion on a novelty may not be worth having. To such readers, it will be pertinent to give a few of the many expressions of praise heard from the recognized leaders of our profession. When Mr. Craig showed some fronds to H. H. Battles, Mr. Battles at once said: "It's an exquisite thing. It will be used with Farleyense." When John Scott, of Brooklyn, saw the plants growing, he said: "It is the best one yet." When James T. Clark, the fern expert, of Henry A. Dreer Co., had examined the house full of plants, he said: "It is far superior to the other one." Which comparison is understood to be with another coming debutante. So you see, here are some opinions really worth having.

The First Assembly.

There were two features of the first Assembly ball held in the Bellevue-Stratford ballroom on Friday evening, January 4, that are worthy of comment. The first was the really magnificent decoration, arranged by J. J. Habermehl's Sons, in which pyramid azaleas were the flowering plant feature of the stage decoration; crimson on one side, white on the other. An expert who has traveled miles to see decorations of note, says of this one, that it was the finest he ever saw. Another feature was the return to the old-fashioned bouquet of our grandmothers, as planned by H. H. Battles and carried out with the assistance of M. Rice, who procured delicate lace bouquet-holders of white and soft shades of pink and blue which were used for finishing what are now considered small and closely packed bunches of tiny buds, or other flowers selected, where possible, to match the gowns of the fair ones carrying them. While these bouquets were not as numerous at this assembly as were the large bouquets some years ago, their advent marked an increase in the popularity of bouquets.

Various Notes.

The statement contained in this column last week that the Florex Gardens will plant over 30,000 Beauties in one house next season created quite a sensation among the Beauty growers who supply this market. It could not be learned that any one of them had become discouraged enough to grow anything else. But they were much surprised and interested, as few if any of them have more American Beauty plants in their entire establishments.

The Peninsula Horticultural Society held a banner meeting at Dover, Del., January 2. The special features arranged were "Home Surrounding and Town Improvement," by J. Otto Thilow, secretary of the Henry A. Dreer Co., and "Plants for Home Adornment and Their Care," by Edwin Lonsdale, superintendent of the horticultural department in Girard College.

John E. Haines, of South Bethlehem, Pa., will read a paper on "My Experience with Carnations," before the Florists' Club at its February meeting. Edward A. Stroud, of Strafford, Pa., will review the Toronto convention.

S. J. Reuter, of Westerly, R. I., spent several days in this city last week with his son, L. J. Reuter, who has been producing some fine stock on the old Bunting place, at Fifty-eighth and Gibson streets. Mr. Reuter, Sr., visited a number of the principal growers while here.

Victor Grosshans, for many years manager of Hugh Graham's place at Logan, has resigned his position. It is understood that he will start in business for himself.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. received on Monday thirty-six cases of moss wreaths that should have reached them near-

NEW YORK.

The Market.

If last week's weather is a sample of what we can produce you can put New York on the list of popular winter resorts and the big city can so far vie with any section of the sunny south for mild temperature. On Monday of this week the average was 50 degrees and at times the temperature rose to 60 degrees. After many days of rain the sunshine and the balmy air made it like a summer day. But the result of the damp, cloudy, miserable weather of late has been to produce the inevitable lack of color and a shortage of the first quality. As a result, notwithstanding a natural drop in business since the holidays, prices for the best stock have been fairly well maintained. By next week the shipments of everything are expected to materially increase. Up to date, January has not been as satisfactory as last year, but the general prosperity among the retailers continues.

Every one of them seems to be busy and contented. With all the great balls and other accompaniments of the festive New York season, a splendid trade may be safely depended on until Lent, or until society begins its hegira to Florida and other popular southern centers.

Beauties have held well, some fine stock touching $75 per hundred the first of the week, although $60 was top almost universally.

Prices have retrograded also on Bride, Maid and Killarney. Richmond maintains its popularity and the long-stemmed stock often has touched $50 per hundred and even now sells readily at $25. There is no surplus of red roses.

Carnations are overabundant at last and prices are down, even for the selects and novelties. The quality remains superb. More orchids are coming in and all the popular varieties are in good demand. A great many are shipped out of the city every day. Prices have decreased a little. The same may be said of gardenias; where they all come from is a mystery.

Harbingers of spring are sweet peas, while lilac and forsythia, making the retail windows increasingly attractive, are potent reminders of the fact that Easter is only eleven weeks away. Already the plantsmen are anticipating the needs of the retailers and booking their orders. Anton Schultheis, of College Point, was in the city Monday, taking time by the forelock, and showed me assorted lists of $500 worth and over for single firms, the proviso being only "save me at least that amount of the best you have and select and mark it for me now." That is the provision the bon ton houses make even this early, knowing how sure will be the call this year for the usual plant Easter, expected to be far in advance of the record breaker of 1906.

The violets are arriving in battalions now and there are enough and to spare. Prices for even the specials did not go above $1 on Monday and most of the stock sold at 75 cents and so on down to 40 cents. It is a question if they go above $1 again at any time before Easter.

Tuesday found business dull.

The Fallon Case.

George O. Fallon is said by the police to have shot and killed Mrs. Lena Wiedemann Monday night in her home in West Eighty-second street and then shot and slashed with a razor Miss Paulina Ratel, a boarder with the Wiedemann family, after which he attempted his own life, but will recover, at the Roosevelt hospital. Miss Ratel, who was taken to the same hospital, also was pronounced out of danger. Fallon is under police guard. Frederick Bergman, a caller on Miss Ratel, who was beaten on the head with the butt end of a revolver by Fallon, is held in the House of Detention as a witness pending an inquiry by Coroner Dooley.

Various Notes.

These are the days of horticultural societies' annual dinners, smokers and receptions. This week the Madison smoker of the Morris County Gardeners' and Florists' Society takes place on Wednesday evening. The same night the Tarrytown Horticultural Society celebrates, an unfortunate coincidence, for no one who has ever attended either wishes to miss one of them. This is a case of being at one place in spirit of necessity, while the temperance dinner of the other is amalgamated. A goodly number of New Yorkers will be at each and the usual success at both towns is always to be depended on.

On January 23 comes the annual dinner of the Nassau County Society. This falls on an evening that finds several who would attend away at the Toronto convention.

There promises to be a carload of New Yorkers to visit their brethren of the "frozen north." The transition from summer to the delights of sleigh riding and a dry, cold atmosphere, full of health and inspiration, will be a treat to all who go. The rate is only $11.85 going, $3.95 to return and $2.50 for the Pullman conveniences. The train leaves the Grand Central depot at 8 p. m., Tuesday, January 22, and engagements for berths, etc., should be made with Dailledouze Bros., of Flatbush, without delay. All the prominent carnationists of this section now intend to be there. No one who has not experienced it can overestimate the sincerity and enjoyment of a Canadian welcome.

Next Monday will be a great night at the New York Florists' Club. The new officers will be installed. Comprehensive addresses may be depended upon. President Totty will outline a policy that will insure another year of great enthusiasm and prosperity. At this meeting novelties in plants and flowers will be exhibited, the various committees will be appointed and the faithful provider of provender will again demonstrate how great a factor he has been in drawing the record attendance of the past three eventful years.

The employees' ball last Saturday night was a great success. Nearly 1,000 were present and it was daylight before the young folks were satisfied. Henry Reiches, of Twenty-eighth street, led the grand march. Vaudeville talent added to the interest. Harry Hoffmeyer led the retail contingent. Next year it will be Terrace Garden and a greater success. As usual, the enterprising promoters came out of the venture whole.

the best paper published for florists and the Florists' Manual is O. K.; am more than pleased with both.

A. W. DARLING.

Rochester, N. Y.

Jan. 2, 1907.

J. K. Allen is receiving large shipments of forsythia in bloom, five to six feet and very fine, for which there is a ready sale.

Joe Fenrich's windows are in the swim, with white lilac, orchids and gardenias from Schultheis and a daily shipment of white violets. Totty's Richmonds are here, also, lots of them.

Joe Millang, of the Cut Flower Co., is enthusiastic over the Winsor carnation and handles a great daily output from the big houses of the F. R. Pierson Co., at Scarboro. The Winsor is winning its way rapidly and proves one of the best of the recent introductions. It will doubtless be seen at its best in Toronto.

Among the Canadian visitors will be A. J. Guttman, introducer of Victory, Imperial and Pink Imperial.

That you may realize how popular the gardenia is becoming, Ford Bros. one day last week received in one shipment forty-seven dozens of them.

Among the New York visitors were Andrew Wilson, of Summit, inventor of the oil that is proving death to scale and all noxious insects, and Mr. Bauer, representing H. H. Battles, of Philadelphia.

A brother of J. J. Perkins, a prominent contractor of Paterson, N. J., was buried January 3, the cause of death being hemorrhage of the brain.

A cablegram from Bristol, England, on Monday announced the death of the mother of A. M. Henshaw, at the age of 66 years. Mrs. Henshaw leaves a husband and eight children, two of them in this country. The sympathy of the trade is extended to these gentlemen in their bereavement.

Mr. Sullivan, of the Cut Flower Co., is rejoicing in the addition of a fourteen-pound florist to his staff.

A goodly number of the wholesalers are battling with the grippe epidemic, which the unseasonable weather has made widespread. Many serious cases are reported. Both Reidel and Hopkins, of Guttman's force, are laid up.

The entire output of the Coddington ranges, illustrated in last week's issue, is handled by H. E. Froment, of 57 West Twenty-eighth street.

The New York Florists' Club dinner will be the event of the season this year and will take place early in February, as usual. Special attractions and effort should assure an attendance double that of recent years. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

The Market.

Christmas trade was good. The weather was suitable for the delivery of plants. Blooming plants were abundant. There were some fine azaleas, Gloire de Lorraine begonias, poinsettias in pans, and stevia. Some florists say the call was not so great for potted plants as in former years, but an increase in the cut flower line. All the retail stores were beautifully decorated with Christmas bells and holly.

We are having too much cloudy weather and it is telling on roses, the color being paler.

Trade since the holidays has been quiet, the only demand being for funeral work and a few parties.

Various Notes.

J. V. Bohrman had a misfortune with his boiler, as the tubes all began to leak and he had to replace them with new ones.

Fred S. Schulz is sending out a beautiful calendar for 1907.

Henry Fuehs has some fine calla lilies and Roman hyacinths.

Adam Heitz's new delivery wagon is of the latest pattern. H. LICHTEFELD.

LENOX, MASS.

The regular meeting of the Lenox Horticultural Society was held January 5, President F. Heeremans in the chair. The entertainment committee submitted a program for the February meetings. They have arranged the annual dinner for February 2 and carnation night for February 16. H. Bunyard, of New York, gave an interesting talk, in which he offered a donation from A. T. Boddington towards our fall show premium list, and he offered a medal for the winner of the society's checker tournament.

A. J. Loveless was awarded a first-class certificate for Cypripedium, Leeanum Adela, a seedling which he raised himself, also diplomas for C. insigne Sanderæ, C. insigne Harefield Hall and ONARGA, ILL.

The following is from the Review of Onarga, Ill., for January 4.

"Ludvig Mosbaek, who has been in charge of the Onargo Greenhouses and farm gardens for the last two or three years, has decided to leave Onarga and join his family in Minnesota, where they have a farm. The partnership existing between Mr. Mosbaek and L. J. Risser has therefore been dissolved, the business being continued under the name of the Mosbaek Greenhouse Co.

"We are sorry to have Mr. Mosbaek leave this community, for he is not only an active, enterprising business man, who thoroughly understands the greenhouse and farm garden business, but he is also an excellent man to do business with, being upright and honorable in his methods, and a thorough gentleman.

"Another man connected with this business who will probably leave us soon is A. Bobjerg, who had charge of the office work under Mr. Mosbaek. Mr. Bobjerg is a man with whom it is a pleasure to do business. By profession he is a minister, is well educated, speaks the English language fluently, and in every way is an excellent citizen. Having had charge of the printing for the company, he has been thrown into close relations with this office, and like his employer, we have found him a pleasant, gentlemanly fellow, whose friendship is worth having."

LANCASTER, O.—M. M. Miesse says he had a big call for lettuce for Christmas, one customer taking 3,000 pounds.

MASSILLON, O.—N. E. Beck has just finished a new house, 24x100, even-span, steam heated, to be used for lettuce. He makes a specialty of asters, pansies and lettuce. Business is good.

ST. LOUIS, MICH.—Frank Kleinhans, of Belding, has purchased a half interest in D. Kleinhans' greenhouse and the firm will be known as Kleinhans Bros. They have just completed a small cool house and in the spring they will erect another large house.

AUGUSTA, GA.—H. W. F. Balk says Christmas trade was satisfactory and ahead of last year. Trade at his Broad street salesrooms has been particularly good. Blooming plants of all kinds are rapidly superseding palms and ferns. Augusta is growing as a flower center and all the florists are doing a good business.

TOPEKA, KAN.—I. H. Ellenberger reports business constantly increasing and that he is building steadily, a little at a time.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA.—J. F. Wilcox reports making Christmas shipments of American Beauties to points as widely separated as Chicago, Ill., and Portland, Ore.

YORK, PA.—Chas. E. Smith says holiday business was about fifteen per cent better than in former years. Plants sold well. He had baskets made up of blooming plants and ferns. Azaleas, ardisias, cyclamen, begonias and poinsettias were all good sellers. Cut flowers were somewhat higher in price than in other years and did not sell so well.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

William Mathews, of Utica, N. Y., is having big success in growing cattleyas and vandas in osmunda roots on bark and intends adopting this method with other varieties. Vanda tricolor, suavis and cærulea are fine specimens. Blooms bring good prices and are in constant demand.

Frank Baker, of Utica, is preparing his usual supply of small ferns, which fill up the empty spaces after Easter stock is gone.

Spencer & Martin have given up their houses, in Utica, and confine their business to the store, which keeps them hustling.

Brant Bros. and Peter Crowe have kept the market in Utica supplied with excellent cuts of roses. Adiantum Croweanum was never better than now.

Dr. Rowlands, of Utica, cannot supply the demand for carnations, which are his specialty.

J. G. Hatcher, of Amsterdam, N. Y., reports big sales of flowering plants, which made up in a measure for the shortage in cut flowers during the holidays. He is now wrestling with the problem of good help, the higher wages being paid by the big corporations making it difficult to get even ordinary labor, excepting at an advanced rate. He is working up quite a seed business.

A. J. Hilton, of Amsterdam, has no kick coming and believes that returns will figure up ahead of last year.

J. O. Graham, at Little Falls, anticipated the demand with an extra supply of pot plants, which are selling better than ever.

Fred Goldring, of Slingerlands, had a job to keep the Albany stores supplied during the holidays and he says he must double his capacity if the demand continues.

Sambrook Bros., at Troy, worked day and night during the holidays. Funeral work interfered with holiday business somewhat.

The forthcoming Knights Templar's convention, at Saratoga, will find a busy man in T. J. Totten, who is figuring on the big contract for decorating. He intends giving considerable space to the new rose, Jules Grolez. He is having a big demand for summer blooming roses under glass.

L. E. Marquisee, of Syracuse, speaks highly of his new white carnation, Marchioness, which is even freer than Enchantress. The flower is perfect in shape, even if partly open. It will be seen at Toronto, if Old Sol will favor this section with a few of his rays. Judging from reports it will be hard to put up a representative shipment from many of the growers. A fine Enchantress is here. It seems distinct from Skidelsky's excellent variety. W. M.

Jackson, Miss.—The Jackson Floral Co. has been incorporated with W. B. Taylor president of the corporation and W. J. Brown, founder of the business, as manager.

Current Comment.

This city has suffered from the worst combination of weather, since the first of the year, it is possible to conceive. With the exception of two cold days, we are having spring temperature, with rain. We had two days' partial sunshine during December and part of one day the last week, the result being a shortage of good flowers of all kinds, especially roses. Carnations are getting soft and are the cause of complaint when shipped any distance, people thinking they are getting old stock.

Business, however, has been good, cleaning up everything that comes in; but this has been true for the last month and the wholesalers have had nothing to complain of. While they have not been receiving great quantities of stock they have been getting large prices and the returns to the growers have, in a way, made up for the shortage in cut.

The retail men, especially the decorators, have been having large innings. Some of the handsomest decorations this city has ever seen were in order last week. Mrs. E. A. Williams, Randolph & McClements and H. L. Blind & Bros. had a series of them at the Pittsburg Florists' Club, and as they were carte blanche orders, there was something doing. They are entitled to credit for not overdoing orders of this kind, but producing the most beautiful effects and each decoration entirely different from any of the others. After having seen these decorations all in the same room night after night I begin to appreciate the fact that the up-to-date decorator must be an artist, full of original ideas with something new and different for each customer.

There has been a good deal of funeral work, but the high prices have kept down the small trade. However, taken altogether, the new year is starting out satisfactorily.

The sending of ball bunches, which was so popular a few years ago, has again become the correct thing and a peep into an artistically decorated ballroom, with seventy-five or 100 elegantly dressed women, each with a large bunch of beautiful flowers, would make the heart of a stone man beat a little above normal. Hoo-Hoo.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

The last year has been a prosperous one; no assignments were made and there was much rebuilding. The new year has begun well. Trade last week was satisfactory. New Year's came in with many entertainments and quite a number of decorations were called for, while cut flowers were used in various ways, mostly in bunches arranged for tables.

Carnations still are in short supply but roses are coming in more steadily. Callas are scarce and Paper White narcissi in many cases take their place. Mignonette is getting plentiful and greens of all kinds are steady. Some poinsettias still are to be had.

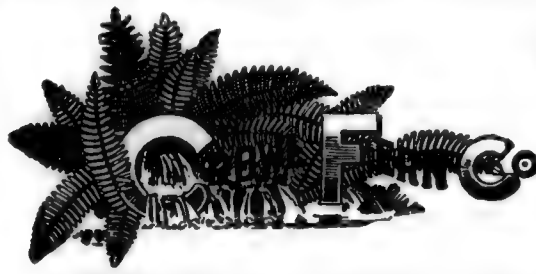
Various Notes.

M. M. Ellis, gardener for Gen. John Gill, has a fine sport from Enchantress, darker than the Rose-pink Enchantress and just as large and more double.

J. Bolgiano & Sons have issued their 1907 spring catalogue. It is tastefully made up and reproductions of many of their customers' photographs appear on the front cover.

Leonard Morse, representing Thomas Meehan & Sons, of Philadelphia, was a visitor here last week.

Many of the seed houses are having inquiries for private gardeners.



J. L. T.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA.—Suit was filed in the superior court, December 29, against the Cedar Rapids Floral Co. The writ is for $105, said to be due the Sharer estate for rent.

LIBERTY, IND.—W. N. Thorp came near burning out last week. After firing up, about 1 a. m., he noticed the soot burning in the stack and this soon fired the timbers around it. There was no damage to the houses.

MALTA, O.—W. C. Scovell says Christmas trade was the best he ever had. He sold a nice lot of mums, some in 7-inch pots, and will have them for several weeks.

CRESCO, IA.—Considerable damage was done to W. B. Perry's greenhouses, January 1, by fire caused by an explosion of gas in the furnace. Several hundred dollars' worth of plants and 700 feet of glass were destroyed. Bursting of the pipes and the consequent shutting off of heat added to the damage to plants. The damage was repaired as rapidly as possible.

CHICAGO, Jan. 9.—Cucumbers, $1 to $2 per doz.; leaf lettuce, 35c to 45c case; spinach, 40c to 50c case; radishes, 35c to 65c doz. bunches; mushrooms, 50c to 60c lb.

BOSTON, Jan. 8.—The weather continues very mild and as a consequence supplies are abundant and trade rather slow. Cucumbers, $4 to $15 box; tomatoes, 40c to 45c lb.; mushrooms, 35c to 75c lb.; radishes, $1.75 box; lettuce, 15c to 35c doz.; romaine, 40c to 50c doz.; mint, 75c doz.; parsley, $1.75 to $2 bushel.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—Cucumbers plenty and weak. Lettuce generally poor and receiving little attention. Mushrooms slow and prices show slight decline. Mint scarce. Radishes steady. Tomatoes firm for best grades. Cucumbers, No. 1, $1.50 to $2 doz.; No. 2, $1 to $1.25 doz.; culls, $2 to $3 box; mushrooms, brown, 25c to 60c lb.; white, 30c to 75c lb.; mint, 50c to $1 doz. bunches; radishes, $2.50 to $3 per hundred bunches; rhubarb, 75c to 90c large bunch; parsley, 15c to 20c per doz. bunches; tomatoes, 10c to 30c lb.

GROWING LETTUCE.

I want to gain information along a line connected with the under glass problem. My home is on a farm of 118 acres, adapted principally to stock growing. I was born on this farm, so am somewhat familiar with farm management. Now the point is here: I do not wish to farm in the regular way, for there is not money enough in it. I have been successful raising a few sheep and have started in a small way to raise Shetland ponies and am doing a nice little business with White Wyandotte chickens. Now, if I could grow something under glass, that would net me, say, $500 a year, my circle would be complete. My sheep and ponies take but little attention and the chickens, say, one to two hours a day.

You are sending me a treatise on asparagus culture. The treatise on violets was received yesterday. Now I want information on growing lettuce under glass. I have a wood lot of some forty acres where I could obtain a great many wagonloads of leaf-mold, also fine decayed wood. Could I use some in any way for lettuce growing? As I am not a professional florist, my chances of success are better along one line. I am only thirty-seven miles from Cleveland, ninety from Pittsburg, thirty from Youngstown and thirty from Akron. In short, can a farmer put up a greenhouse, say, 22x100 feet, grow some one or two things, and make enough money to pay for time and money expended. H. J. A.

It should be easily possible for you to make a fair profit out of a house of lettuce. Lettuce is not a difficult crop to handle and it is one that is reasonably certain of a market in one of the neighboring cities you mention. Your soil will serve admirably, with the addition of stable manure.

CUCUMBERS.

I have a greenhouse, 20x100 feet, now devoted to other crops, but I would like to try cucumbers. How many plants will the house hold; that is, how far apart in rows should they be planted and how many rows to a bench? What is the usual date of planting and how long are they in crop? How many cucumbers might I expect to pick from each plant and what other crops would you suggest using with them? How about chrysanthemums followed by lettuce and then cucumbers? W. H. E.

The plants should be set eighteen inches apart in the rows, that will make twenty-five plants to the row of 100 feet. The number of rows will depend largely on the arrangement of your benches.

Comet Tomato

Those who force tomatoes should give "Comet" a trial. This variety has been the talk of gardeners around Boston the past season. Those who have seen it growing declare there's nothing to compare with it. Seed, $5.00 per oz.

WILLIAM SIM, Cliftondale, Mass.

Mention The Review when you write.

The rows should be, at least, three feet apart, but, of course, your walks would count for space. If your benches are three and one-half feet wide they will accommodate two rows nicely, the plants being set near the edges of your bench. But if only two feet wide, only one row could be given justice.

It is not so much the amount of root space required, as cucumbers grow in a comparatively small amount of soil, considering the size of the plants, as it is the air space and amount of light that the plants require. The height the plants may be allowed to attain will depend on the headroom available, but, allowing them a height of five feet, it will be seen that one row would shade the other, unless sufficient space were allowed.

The date of planting will depend on your command of heat and the amount of coal you calculate to burn. In winter, the higher price of the product may be counted on to pay for the extra expense and trouble, when as the season advances and the weather becomes warm, less expense and less trouble being required to produce the crop, the price naturally falls. So, as far as the paying end of it goes, it does not make much difference at which season you grow the crop.

For a beginner, however, the best time to plant would be after the middle of February, as they are easier handled during the warmer spring months than through the dull weather in winter. It takes four to five weeks, to have the plants large enough for setting out, from the time the seeds are planted.

A cucumber plant will produce from two to three dozen cucumbers, according to the care given and success of the crop.

The rotation of crops you suggest should work out all right. If good plants of lettuce are set out, after the chrysanthemums are over, they ought to be cleared out in about ten weeks, which would give you nice time for a spring crop of cucumbers. W. S. CROYDON.

A MICHIGAN LETTUCE FACTORY.

There was a time when vegetable growers thought any old-fashioned house was good enough for lettuce, but in these modern days it has been found that lettuce is deserving of as good a house as any other crop. One of the up-to-date establishments with which the state of Michigan is dotted is that of Chamberlain & Bunker, at Fremont. They have in the last two or three years erected a large establishment, partly devoted to carnations and spring bedding plants, but principally devoted to the forcing of lettuce, radishes, cucumbers, parsley and tomatoes. They put their lettuce up in fifteen-pound baskets and find a wide market for it among the retail grocers.

Their houses are wide, long, high, light and airy. They would do for American Beauties as well as for lettuce. One of these houses is shown in the accompanying illustration. Of course, the lettuce being on the ground level instead of on raised benches adds something to the appearance of the height in the house. But Chamberlain & Bunker say that they find the larger body of air confined in these high houses aids materially in maintaining an even temperature. A sudden change does not penetrate to the plants so quickly as it does in small houses. Once the house is raised to the proper temperature it is carried there with little expense of attention or fuel.

Chamberlain & Bunker were among the first growers to make a test of mechanical watering and the picture shows the Wittbold sprinkling apparatus in operation along one side of this house. It is difficult to get a photograph which shows the sprinklers working, for the spray is so misty that the camera fails to catch it and it appears only as a fog on the negative. In this case, however, the light was just right to show the waterfall. Chamberlain & Bunker have equipped their entire establishment with this mechanical sprinkler. They say they are more than pleased with it and like it better the more they use it. "It does the work in every way far more satisfactorily than we dared hope when we first put it in."

The Rural New Yorker recently contained a two-column writeup of mechanical watering in which its many advantages were pointed out, and the statement was made that its adoption by the vegetable growers is becoming general and that mechanical watering promises to revolutionize the trucking industry in the south. Indeed, A. H. Ahten, a well-known New Orleans grower, says it saves him $3 or $4 a day in cost of labor, besides doing the work better than by the old-fashioned means.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

EUROPEAN growers report an entire failure of the seed crop of Japanese morning-glory.

WHERE are the people who said there was plenty of all kinds of onion seed floating around?

THE deliveries of the important varieties of turnip radishes from the European growers are lower than their lowest estimates.

THAT part of the seed trade that is wrestling with belated catalogues would be glad to see an old-fashioned blizzard envelop the country.

D. M. FERRY & CO.'S preliminary wholesale list for 1907 has no price placed opposite Southport White Globe onion seed. It states: "Crop very short; sold out."

CHICAGO.—The greenhouse vegetable grower is complaining much about the dark weather. It is a serious drawback to his business, as fruits do not form well on cucumber vines without a little sunshine occasionally.

THE soft weather which the present year has given to date is said to be having a bad effect on the sweet corn seed that the growers are trying to get into shape for shipping. Dry, hard weather would be more satisfactory.

VISITED CHICAGO.—H. W. Buckbee, Rockford, Ill.; Wm. Hagemann, New York; J. C. Robinson, Waterloo, Neb., on his way to attend the meeting of the executive committee of the American Seed Trade Association at Washington this week.

WILLIAM HENRY MAULE says in his catalogue, speaking of the Southport Globe onions: "This year the crop is unusually short and I have had to advance my prices; but they will be found reasonable considering the quality of in various places between five and eleven inches of rain fell in thirty-six hours. Since that time we have had rains every two or three days, so the planting of seeds has been seriously delayed."

THE Congressional free seed distribution for 1907 has begun.

THE Holland bulb men have invaded the west in full force.

H. N. BRUNS, Chicago, imported 795 cases of valley pips this year.

CHICAGO.—Onion sets are said to be keeping in first-class shape, notwithstanding the unfavorable weather.

THE Soestdyk, from Rotterdam, arriving at New York January 4, brought considerable quantities of Holland grown seeds.

THE wholesale lists received this week are numerous, but in nearly every one some items are either omitted or marked "stock exhausted."

IT appears that it is not the car shortage that is holding back the shipment of sweet corn; the drying and handling is no small task, with labor scarce.

W. W. BARNARD Co., Chicago, reports having booked, as early as December 28, a considerable acreage of peas with farmers in the vicinity of Sturgeon Bay.

IT is stated that one western seed house, catering to market gardeners' trade, requires each year 15,000 pounds of Scarlet Turnip White Tipped radish.

THE Batchelor Seed Store, at Utica, N. Y., has been incorporated with $5,000 capital stock. The directors are Wm. M. Ross and C. F. Saul, of Syracuse, and A. C. Langdon, of Utica.

WILLIAM EMERSON, manager of the Western Seed & Irrigation Co., Fremont, Neb., writes, in renewing his subscription: "I do not know any special news to write you about at present, no more than that we are very busy receiving, cleaning, hand-picking and making ready for shipment just at this time our crops of sweet and field corn. Vine seeds are nearly all in from the growers and shipments nearly completed. We have had quite a number of disappointing crops of vine seeds this fall, but mostly in the line of some varieties of muskmelon and watermelon, which did not become fully matured on account of the unfavorable season."

"THE fact that success in the seed business depends directly on the confidence reposed in a firm by its patrons," say W. W. Rawson & Co., in their market gardeners' list, "was never more surely proven than after our disastrous fire, in which our stock of seed was nearly totally destroyed. The way in which the thousands of our customers stood by us in the midst of our misfortune will ever be a bright spot in the history of our firm. While the fire destroyed the greater part of our stock, we were fortunate in having the seed stock of our most valuable specialties safely stored at our market garden in Arlington."

IT appears that it is Dr. B. T. Galloway's plan to end the free seed distribution by diverting the funds to the original purpose of exploration and the distribution of new plants only.

ONION CONTRACTS.

One of the California seed growers announces that he will take onion contracts for 1907 crop, subject to pro rata delivery in event of short crop, at the following prices, net sixty days from date of shipment:

S'hport W. Globe.	$1.35	Phila. S. Skin...	$1.25
S'hport R. Globe.	.85	Wht. Portugal...	1.25
S'hport Y. Globe.	.75	Prizetaker	.70
L. R. W'hersfield	.85	E. E. Red Flat.	.75
Ohio Y. Globe...	.75	Y. G. Danvers...	.65
Y. Strasburg	.50	Y. F. Danvers...	.50
Aust. E. E. Gl..	.65	Australian Brown	.50

Other California growers say they are not yet prepared to set prices for the 1907 crop of onion and several of them are not making the usual eastern contracting trip.

CONDITIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

Lester C. Morse, of C. C. Morse & Co., writes under date San Francisco, December 31, as follows:

"Conditions in California so far are normal. There has been an abundance of rain for the month of December, and while onion bulbs have not all been planted, they are keeping well and will probably soon be in the ground.

"The last season was extremely discouraging, and the returns in the seed business were not commensurate with the risk nor the capital invested. Practically every branch of industry in California has been paying better than the seed business. We think this will mean that the seed growers will be forced to demand better prices another season."

CONTRACT PRICES.

The trade had made up its mind to accept a rise in contract prices for 1907 crop but the rates proposed by some of the California growers are, nevertheless, a surprise. An increase of 2 cents to 4 cents a pound for lettuce, for example, is not considered especially modest, but some growers are giving certain varieties a boost of 7 cents or 8 cents and on one or two sorts considerably more. It looks too strong to many. Again, in the case of onion, if the Southport Globes on contract, f. o. b. in the Santa Clara valley are going to cost in 1907 pretty nearly what they were priced at in the 1905 retail catalogues, there are a good many other places where onion seed is likely to be grown in a small way in competition; good onion seed can be grown in the central states, although smut has been a big factor when it has been tried. There is said to be a pronounced shortage of onion bulbs on the coast, but there are enough in the east so that a good many patches will likely be planted in favorable localities for seed in 1907. With radish the advance is not quite so precipitate and probably is fully warranted by the failure of the French and Michigan crops in 1906. On sweet peas, also, the increase is not attracting the attention it is on onions; on these the prices may be warranted by conditions on the coast, but to the retailer it looks as if the proposed rates are more than the traffic will bear.

THE LAW IN MAINE.

"The state of Maine laws regulating the sale of food, feeding stuffs, agricultural seeds, and commercial fertilizers, are plain, explicit and reasonable," says Chas. D. Woods, director of the State Experiment Station. "There is an evident desire on the part of most dealers to conform to the laws so far as they understand them. Up to the present time, the endeavors of the executive officer of the law have been largely educational. While educational methods will still be used, it may become necessary to use other measures in case there are any who seem unwilling to learn.

"Agricultural seeds must be true to name and carry a guarantee of the percentage of purity. Considerable poor and unguaranteed grass seed was sold in 1906. Such sales must cease.

"The penalty for the violation of the provisions of any of the laws is a fine not exceeding $100 for the first offense and not exceeding $200 for each subsequent offense."

ABOUT SEED PRICES.

The maker of the catalogue of the Forrest Seed Co., Cortland, N. Y., must be a reader of the Seed Trade Department of our esteemed contemporary, the Congressional Record, of Washington, D. C. But he should not believe all that the congressional free-seeders say. This is from the catalogue of the Forrest Seed Co.:

"We have not waited to see what price the combination or other seedsmen were going to give in their catalogues. We can afford to sell our seeds at the prices given in this catalogue, and as long as they last you shall have them, and when they are gone, they will be gone until another crop. We will positively not buy and fill orders with other people's seeds we know nothing about. Do you believe in combinations and trusts? If you do, don't buy Forrest's seeds. He makes his own prices. He does not meet with the other seedsmen and agree on a price."

But on another page we learn that it is not the seed trust but the high rents that govern prices: "So is the day passing when you will stop sending to the large cities, to the men who sit in the ninth story of a ten-story building, writing up and painting pictures of plants and vegetables for their catalogues. We do not give you any colored plates; they cost too much—but we give you value in seed, good, straight, honest seeds, at honest prices. Do you ever think of the enormous expense that the city seedsmen are under? Look at the difference in rents, and other enormous expenses they have compared with ours."

But it is interesting to note that the Forrest Seed Co. asks $2.75 for Southport White Globe onion, and $2.50 for

ROMAN HYACINTHS.

Roman hyacinths have been strongly in evidence in the Covent Garden market, London, for some weeks and a good business has been done, considering the heavy quantities on the market. This is, in a great measure, due to the action of the bulb growers' combine in the French hyacinth districts, forcing up the price of bulbs for the last four years or so, making them quite prohibitive to the ordinary grower. It might have been plain to the French growers, at the outset, that such a holding up of prices and consequent holding of stock could not last and would do them no good, but simply load them with unsold stock. The result is as might be expected. Prices last year for best bulbs were in some cases low, one grower securing a first-sized lot of 70,000 as low as 28 shillings per thousand, against as much as 84 shillings in previous years.

In one way, good has been done, as during the time of these high prices for bulbs few, if any, blooms of Romans were ever seen on our markets, giving the public an entire change from this particular flower, of which they had had, for a long time, an over-supply. This year, the bulbs being comparatively cheap last fall, growers have utilized them in large lots and they have come into the markets, meeting a fresh and healthy demand, which has rapidly cleared the supplies at profitable prices.

J. B.

Lancaster, Pa.—B. K. Denlinger has retired from the business and has been succeeded by Harry W. Denlinger.

Gorham, Me.—Nathaniel Hannaford says there has been more of a demand for flowers than could be supplied. Prices are high, especially on carnations. Plants are making good growth, but do not flower.

Dayton, O.—Warren G. Matthews, of the Dayton Floral Co., reports Christmas trade this season the best ever. There was a great call for choice potted plants. Holly was in demand, but of poor quality.

Montgomery, Ala. — The Riverside Co. has been incorporated by William B. Marks, H. C. Borden and Paul T. Sayre to conduct a dairy, engage in market gardening, fruit-raising, etc. Capital stock is $25,000.

Short Hills, N. J.—The firm of Anderson & Christensen has dissolved partnership, J. F. Anderson having purchased the interest of Thomas P. Christensen. The houses are all stocked with good, salable plants in first-class condition.

Olney, Ill.—The Wilson Floral Co. has purchased Mrs. Stauffer's greenhouse and added the same to its plant. This company has now about 14,000 feet of glass and grows lettuce, carnations and general stock.

BATAVIA, ILL.

The Batavia Greenhouses, of which Henry Wenberg and Charles Johnson are proprietors and managers, is well established and is doing a flourishing business. The greenhouses, which are centrally located, are four in number, with about 15,000 feet of glass, and are of modern construction. A hot water system heats the plant. They do a wholesale and retail business, and much of their product reaches the Chicago market.

There is also a nursery which comprises four acres of land, about one-third being planted to peonies. The balance is planted to fruit and shade trees, lilacs and shrubbery.

PORTSMOUTH, O. — The Herms Floral Co. lost what remained of its store stock by frost on Christmas night and at the same time the pump gave way at the greenhouses, resulting in considerable loss by frost.

ORANGE, N. J.

The regular monthly meeting of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was held January 4, when the following officers were installed: President, W. J. Bennett; vice-president, Arthur T. Caparn; secretary, Henry Halbig; treasurer, William Reid. The reports for the year were read and the distribution of awards for the monthly floral display was made, consisting of seven silver cups. The Julius Roehrs Co. exhibited some remarkably long stemmed valleys, measuring nineteen inches from base of stalk to the top of the flowers, and Thomas Jones, of Short Hills, a white cattleya orchid. J. B. D.

ONEIDA, N. Y.—Eugene Haenlin, who has had charge of C. Will Chappell's greenhouses, has resigned and will open a greenhouse of his own in this place.

PACIFIC COAST.

San Bernardino, Cal.—J. H. Cox has succeeded to the business of the Downer Seed & Plant Co.

Santa Cruz, Cal.—The Leedham Bulb Co. recently received a large shipment of bulbs from Europe, valued at $2,000.

San Jose, Cal.—Mr. C. Navlet, the florist, was married recently, the bride being a young lady of Tres Pinos. The ceremony was performed in Santa Cruz.

George Compere has brought a new colony of parasites from China, to be bred by the California State Horticultural Commission, at San Diego, and distributed in orange orchards infested with purple scale.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Holiday Trade.

Our predictions of a big holiday trade were fully realized. We have visited all the retail stores and found the verdict unanimous that Christmas trade beat all previous records by at least twenty per cent. Preparations for this great event seem to begin earlier every year, and, judging from the long hours of hard work for two weeks preceding, we doubt if the great volume of business just handled can be exceeded in coming years. Even the weather, wet and disagreeable in the extreme, did not dampen the ardor of the public. Flowering plants and basket arrangements were the best and most numerous ever seen here and were our salvation. Those ranking first were a splendid lot of azaleas, poinsettias, Lorraine begonias and pans of daffodils which commanded a most profitable figure. The poinsettia is preëminently taking here, owing to its brilliant color. After the stampede there were barely enough plants left in all the stores to form a suggestive trade-mark.

The cut flower department made a complete surrender and our only regret is that we did not have a few thousand more carnations. Roses were superior to those of last year, notwithstanding four weeks of unfavorable weather. A few hundred late chrysanthemums sold from 50 cents to $1 each. Violets and cut poinsettias were scarce, as none were shipped in from California. So great was the demand for everything that half the forces were obliged to work all Monday night putting up orders and arranging the stock for the grand finale.

Very little profit was made by the retailers on holly and mistletoe, owing to the scarcity and poor quality of the former and a monopoly of the latter by the street venders.

Another heavy demand for cut flowers was made on New Year's and there were none left unsold. Between the Christmas and New Year festivities there was a good call for funeral work, allowing us little time to recruit our lost vitality. It was the crowning effort of our lives and we are still feeling the effects of it.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Now that both the principal holidays of the season are past and gone we can form a fair estimate of the business done and compare it with that of former years. Although this is the first season we have had since the fire and there are not over one-quarter as many stores in town as there were a year ago, the florists were well satisfied with the results. Both days showed a good demand for all classes of stock and, except in rare instances, there was ample to supply all demands.

The heaviest business was done on the days prior to Christmas and stock was well cleaned up; so that there was really a shortage between then and New Year's. Prices were good throughout and any one having anything to sell had no difficulty in disposing of it. There was some shortage of poinsettias, both cut and grown in pots. The continued cold weather in the southern portion of the state had much to do with the scarcity of cut stems and the dealers who had good quantities on hand reaped a harvest.

With carnations and roses the supply was just about equal to the demand. Valley was in fair quantity and had a rapid sale. Roman hyacinths were not as plentiful as formerly and but little show was made of azaleas, camelias or other flowering plants.

Both maidenhair and smilax are scarce at present. Many of our largest growers have made but little effort since the fire to keep up stocks of either of these commodities and, as a consequence, there has been a shortage with no immediate signs of easing for some time to come.

Various Notes.

S. T. Marshall, of the Fresno nurseries, is in town on a few days' visit.

Serveau Bros. are in line with a heavy stock of small flowering stuff for the spring trade. They report a heavy holiday trade in all lines.

J. D. Case is down on a visit from Oregon. He will remain in San Francisco until February 1.

A regular meeting of the Society Hortensia was held at the residence of H. Gresens in Alameda January 5. The proposition of holding a spring flower show was discussed and will be decided by a committee.

The Eureka Wire Works is located permanently with the Piedmont Floral & Seed Co. on San Pablo avenue, Oakland.

The California Nursery Co., of Niles, Cal., has opened a sales yard in Los Angeles for the season.

Schwerin Bros. have had splendid success with their crop of valley, having probably the largest cut in the city for Christmas.

Charles Stappenbach reports a heavy holiday trade. He had much difficulty in filling orders for long-stemmed Beauty for Christmas.

From present indications there will be but little in the line of violets to sell this season, except the Princess violet. The demand for the double varieties is not noticeable this year.

Red bells, owing to the fact that they were sold by all the department stores, did not move as fast as they did last season. G.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The Rising & Dunscomb Co., which succeeded the Ocean Park Floral Co., founded by E. J. Vawter, plans to be able to meet any of the widely varying calls made upon a horticultural concern in this locality. The company has also succeeded to the names, good-will and business of the Hollywood Rose Co. and the West Park Nursery. At Ocean Park the concern has eighteen acres solidly planted with carnations for blooming in the field. This is one of the sights of southern California, the subject of magazine articles, and annually visited by thousands of tourists. So great has the demand become that an additional ten acres is now being planted. There also are two acres of violets, narcissi, etc., in proportion. Asparagus is grown in large quantities, 20,000 strings being produced annually, to say nothing of bunches of plumosus and Sprengeri, also adiantum. There are three acres of roses for cut flowers and the local retail trade takes 20,000 rose plants a year. A retail store is conducted at Ocean Park and a wholesale headquarters has recently been opened at 205 North Broadway, in Los Angeles. J. L. Dunscomb, secretary of the company, is a former Chicago railroad man, full of push, and greatly pleased with southern California as compared with the climate in the immediate vicinity of Dearborn station, where he spent many years.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

F. A. WEBER, of Weber & Sons, St. Louis, is visiting nurseries in New York.

THE labor question is one which threatens to assume large importance as the spring planting season approaches.

WM. A. PETERSON, proprietor of Peterson's nursery, was reëlected a director of the State Bank of Chicago January 8.

THE George Wittbold Co., Chicago, has twenty acres planted to shrubs and perennials at its plant at Edgebrook, just outside of the city.

THE Phoenix Nursery Co., Bloomington, Ill., puts a red tag, made of metal, on every tree it ships and finds the trademark an excellent aid to advertising.

H. L. FROST, of Boston, addressed the horticultural society at Worcester, Mass., January 3, on "Appliances and Practical Methods of Suppressing San Jose Scale."

THE United States Department of Agriculture has issued a circular, No. 45, on forest planting in eastern Nebraska, which will be of interest to western nurserymen.

GEORGE E. STONE, of Hatch Experiment Station, Amherst, Mass., will address the Worcester County Horticultural Society, at Worcester, February 14, on "Shade Tree Problems."

WHOLESALE nurserymen report many complaints of slow movement of cars, probably more trouble arising from this cause in the last season than from any difficulty in getting cars when wanted.

RHUS COTINOIDES is a very handsome species, with oval leaves of good size, which color highly if planted in a soil not over rich. It differs considerably from the common R. Cotinus in having larger foliage and a free, upright habit, which is very striking on a plant of good size.

AS a flowering shrub the North American dogwood, Cornus florida, is difficult to surpass, its beauty being greatly enhanced by the attendant large, white bracts, and there are few shrubs to compare with it when the leaves assume their beautiful soft tints in autumn.

THE annual meeting of the Oklahoma Nurserymen's Association was held in the Chamber of Commerce building, in Oklahoma City, Tuesday, January 8. No attempt was made to publish a program, but each member brought up the topics he wished to have discussed. The objects of the organization are threefold—educational, fraternal, protective.

THE Ohio Horticultural Society will hold its fortieth annual meeting January 16 to 18, at the state capitol at Columbus. A number of nurserymen are on the program and many others will be present. A joint session will be held January 19 with the American Breeders' Association. Among those well known in the trade who will address this meeting are H. H. Groff, of Simcoe, Ont., and E. H. Cushman, Sylvania, O., who will discuss breeding gladioli, and C. W. Ward, Queens, N. Y., who will talk on the introduction of new plants.

E. Y. TEAS, Centerville, Ind., says that "there seems to be great interest in catalpa seeds and seedlings among those who wish to make plantations for timber. There is general belief that C. speciosa is the best variety to plant. It is said that unscrupulous persons are selling seeds of inferior sorts for speciosa, in spite of the fact that seeds of the latter are distinct from the others."

THE Nebraska State Horticultural Society will hold its thirty-eighth annual meeting at Lincoln, Neb., January 15 to 17. The officers are: President, J. H. Hadkinson, Benson; first vice-president, H. S. Harrison, York; second vice-president, C. H. Green, Fremont; treasurer, Peter Youngers, Geneva; secretary, L. M. Russell, Lincoln; directors, W. G. Swan, Tecumseh; A. J. Brown, Geneva; J. A. Yager, Fremont. Headquarters of the society will be at the Lindell Hotel.

SHUTT-UPDEGRAFF WEDDING.

The marriage of Gilbert L. Shutt, late of the park board of Minneapolis, Minn., to Miss Helen T. Updegraff, daughter of the late Judge Robert D. Updegraff and granddaughter of the late Congressman J. T. Updegraff, was solemnized at the family residence, 6314 Franklin avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, December 23, 1906. The bride is well known in Cleveland and is one of the most popular young women of the west side. The couple left amid many congratulations and good wishes, for their future home, corner of Hamline and Hoyt avenues, St. Paul, Minn.

Mr. Shutt is a hard-working, enthusiastic and progressive horticulturist, having spent his whole life in his chosen profession. He for a number of years was employed by some of the leading firms in the country, such as the Wm. H. Moon Co., the Storrs & Harrison Co., Robert Simpson, the Park Floral Co., Denver, etc. He was employed on the Westinghouse and Jones estates, Pittsburg, Pa., for some time and later as superintendent of Ben MacDhui, one of the best equipped and most beautiful rural estates in the state of Michigan. He has resigned his position with the park board to associate himself with the Hoyt Plant & Seed Co., of St. Paul, where he will take charge of the fast growing work of their landscape engineering and nursery department. He has many friends in the trade in both commercial and private lines, who join

DISEASED LILIES.

I have some Harrisii lilies, the lower leaves of which turn soft and flabby and yellow in color and drop off. It makes the plants look bad. They were potted in October and brought in December 1. They are now about ten inches tall. What is the cause of this and how can I remedy the trouble? I have them plunged, on a light bench, in four inches of wood shavings. By examining the roots I find a small insect a quarter of an inch in length and cream, almost white, in color. E. O.

It is not likely that the trouble is any fault of yours. We recognize the trouble you have, but it is not so prevalent among the Bermuda bulbs as among the early imported Japan bulbs. We once had a bad case of it with a lot of bulbs we bought under the name of Bermuda longiflorums. The leaves wilted and had the appearance of being scalded. We do not approve of plunging them on the bench inside. Get them out of that and put them on a warm, bright bench. We know nothing about the small worm that is infesting the roots. You might try a weak solution of lime water, a piece of fresh lime the size of an ordinary orange in three gallons of water. It will not hurt the plants, and it may not hurt the worms. W. S.

TIFFIN, O.—A parcel of ground has been given to the city of Tiffin, to be beautified and forever known as Ullrich Place, in honor of the memory of the late Lewis Ullrich. The donor is David J. Stalter, a warm friend of the deceased.

3 NEW CANNAS

WILLIAM SAUNDERS
The flowers are large, of splendid form, and are borne very freely in immense clusters. The color is a deep rich shining scarlet slightly dappled with crimson. Foliage is a rich bronze. Height, 3½ to 4 feet. We believe that Wm. Saunders is decidedly the most perfect Canna of this type that has been introduced. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

OTTAWA
Is a strong grower, very robust and 5 to 6 feet high. The flowers are large and beautifully formed, color is carmine with tints of old rose and deep coral, add to this the silken sheen and you can imagine the effect a few plants will produce.
NOTE—We had this Canna on trial among the Canadian experimental stations last summer and this is the official report of their expert: "Quite distinct and one of the most beautiful shades of color I ever saw in Cannas. Of 70 massed in one bed during the past season, this was the most floriferous in the collection, coming into bloom early and continuing until cut down by frost, as many as 13 expanded heads of blooms being counted at one time on a plant, and not a poor one among them, all being of immense size." 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

NEW YORK
Has the Orchid type of flower. They have much more substance than the flowers of the other varieties of this class, and will stand the hot sunshine as well as the toughest varieties of cannas. The color is a solid rich scarlet covered with a beautiful glowing sheen. The flowers are large and contrast beautifully with the dark bronze foliage. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.
Send for our list and prices of 60 other leading varieties of Cannas.

PEORIA, ILL.

The largest and oldest greenhouse establishment in Peoria is that of Cole Bros., which covers all of the 1600 block on North Perry avenue. There are fifty greenhouses and the great quantity of flowers and plants taken from them every day is evidence of the business done by this firm.

The Cole brothers have grown up in Peoria and the business has grown with them. They started with one small greenhouse and no thought of a downtown office, but as the population increased the increased demands necessitated constant additions. Cole Bros. were the first in this place to give attention to floral designs and this work is done by them on a large scale.

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. Delivery January 5 to 10 and later. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business since the holidays has been as it usually is at this time of the year; that is, it has been quiet. The demand for all varieties of stock is good, but the supply is limited. Roses and carnations are both scarce and the price continues high. Never before has the price of carnations ruled so high. They are really averaging higher prices now than at the holidays. Lily of the valley and narcissi are selling well and so are all other small flowers that can be used for funeral work, which really constitutes the main part of the business. Violets are good property and are bringing good prices, especially for the single varieties.

We are having peculiar weather for midwinter. Today the temperature is 60 degrees and going up, as the sun is shining brightly, which in itself is a peculiar thing, as we have seen its rays only about five days in the last thirty. Stock in the greenhouses is suffering accordingly. Maids are off color and all varieties are soft and weak stemmed. It is to be hoped that we will have some good cold, clear weather before long, so that stock will have a chance to recover from the effect of the long continued warm and cloudy weather.

Various Notes.

The Cincinnati Florists' Society meets January 12, at 8 p. m., and from present indications it will be the banner meeting of the year. The officers are doing their best to work up interest in the meetings and if only the members will help a little by coming they will be surprised at the fine and profitable time they will have. The meeting Saturday will be a smoker and there will be talks by several of the members on subjects which will be of general interest to all present.

The rapidly approaching carnation meeting at Toronto is now being talked of a great deal. There will be four or, perhaps, five go from this city. Some action will doubtless be taken at the society meeting as to what route the Cincinnati party will travel over. It is expected to join the Chicago delegation at Detroit.

We wish to ANNOUNCE TO THE TRADE that we have withdrawn our Crimson Carnation from the market, at least for this season, and perhaps permanently. During the last few weeks of dark weather it has shown an inclination to contract a disease which if allowed to get any headway would speedily ruin it for commercial growing. The strain of dissemination, and subjection to changed methods of culture would undoubtedly cause it to go to pieces right away, and knowing the circumstances, it would be unjust to the variety and the trade to let it go out. We will continue to grow it as our main crimson, and if it throws off the disease entirely we may let it go out later, but not until we feel assured that it will trot, and be a credit to us. While we regret this very much, we are grateful that it showed this weakness before we had begun sending out the stock.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business is certainly booming. There is a great deal of entertaining going on this season, and when you add to this a lot of funeral work, no wonder stock moves so well.

Stock is good considering the unusually dark weather we have had. The weather man gives December credit for just one real bright day. January started in as bad, but the outlook is better. Prices are high.

There are no Beauties to speak of on the market. Roses are selling readily at $5 to $12.50 per hundred. Carnations run as high as $4 per hundred for extra fine Enchantress. Narcissi, Romans, daffodils, stevia, etc., move readily. The daffodils are small. Many poor violets, both single and double, are thrown out daily. The Rhinebeck violets sell well.

Club Meeting.

The Detroit Florists' Club meeting, held January 2, was well attended considering the busy season. The cigars were on Ed Phillips this time, on account of a baby girl. After the regular business a general discussion of Christmas business followed. The absence of our friend Scribner was noticeable. Mr. Scribner is to read an essay on "Trials and Tribulations of Detroit Florists" at the next meeting, January 16.

Various Notes.

The recent scarcity of cut flowers in this city has compelled many of the florists to get better prices, and we hope they will hold to them.

Herman and Robert Klagge mourn the loss of their mother, who passed away at Mount Clemens, Saturday, January 5.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

The prices on cut flowers still remain stiff. Carnations are not plentiful and prices range from $3 to $8. There has been quite a good deal of funeral work, which keeps stock cleaned up, except narcissi, which are quite plentiful. Roman hyacinths are not forced so much as they were five years ago. Potted plants are still in the lead. Our customers claim they last so much longer and give better satisfaction. There has been a special run on azaleas this season. Begonia Gloire de Lorraine is all right, but don't last long enough after being taken from the greenhouse and will never be the leading plant for Christmas.

Various Notes.

Arthur Newell has sold the greenhouses of Mrs. J. B. Cohen, of Lexington, Mo., to D. W. Trine, from Dooley, Va. We are informed that Mr. Trine is well pleased with his new place and had a splendid trade at Christmas. Mr. Cohen, who died recently, was a good friend of Mr. Newell and the latter often visited him and enjoyed a good time hunting with him.

James Pain has the finest lot of narcissi in the city.

Jacob Tobler spent a few days in Pleasant Hill, Mo., visiting friends and hunting over the grounds where he hunted in his youthful days.

We see by the daily papers that Ed. Ellsworth has taken out a permit to build a conservatory of brick, to cost $2,000.

The Hollanders are quite plentiful nowadays. J. A. Vandervoort, of Speelman & Sons' Bulb Co.; J. Tegelaar, of Guldemond & Sons, and V. De Rudder, of K. J. Kuyk, were visitors last week.

W. H. H.

WILTON JUNCTION, IA.

On account of severe illness last summer John Beimford was obliged to dispose of his greenhouses. But he will, no doubt, again take up the business as soon as able to do so and he finds a suitable climate.

Friederichsen Bros. have purchased the greenhouses and added them to their plant. They have also put in a new Kroeschell boiler and built a 45-foot brick stack. They are now better equipped for business than ever. J. B.

I COULD not run my business without the REVIEW.—S. J. HIDER, Hillsboro, O.

Araucarias Our Specialty

OUR LITTLE PETS

From Aschmann, in Philadelphia, we bought
An Araucaria, a pet for our little girl
Now we have two pets, the pride of our thought:
The little girl so sweet, a head full of curls,
And the Araucaria with its everlasting green—
A more joyful home you never have seen.

Araucara compacta robusta and glauca is a perfect marvel of Nature, a wonder of Nature; the brush of an artist cannot paint it any better. Price—6 to 7-in. pots, 4 to 6 years old, 4 to 6 tiers, 25 to 30 inches high and wide, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00 to $2.50 each. Specimen Glauca, 5 years old, 7-in. pots, 6 to 7 tiers, 30 to 35 inches high and wide, $2.00, $2.50 to $3.00 each; 6-in. pots, 3 to 5 tiers, 3 years old, 15 to 25 inches high, $1.00 to $1.25 each.

Araucaria Excelsa 6-in. pots, 5 to 7 tiers, 4 years old, 25 to 30 inches high, $1.00 to $1.50 each.

are not scarce with us. We can meet all wants.

Kentia Forsteriana, 7-in. pots, made-up, one large size plant about 45 to 48 inches high in the center and three smaller sizes, 25 to 30 inches high around it, which gives them a good appearance, $2.00 to $2.50 each; 6-in. pots, single plants, 36 to 45 inches high, 5 to 6 good leaves, 4 years old, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 each; 6-in pots, 32 to 36 inches high, 5 to 6 good leaves, 4 years old, $1.00 each; 5½ to 6-in. pots, 4 years old, 30 inches high, 5 good leaves, 75c each.

Dracaena Bruanti (imported), 30 inches high, 6-inch pots, 50c; $5.00 per dozen. Full of golden waxy foliage from top to bottom, the best Dracaena known for house decoration; stands any amount of heat and dust; a great favorite all over Europe; easy to keep.

FERNS—All raised in pots and not on bench, as follows:

Nephrolepis Barrowsii, 7-in. pots as big as a bushel basket, 75c to $1.00 each; 6-in. pots, large, ready for 7-in., 50c; 5½-in., 40c; 5-in., 35c; 4-in., 25c.

Boston Ferns, 7-in., very bushy, only 75c; 6-in., 50c or $5.00 per dozen; 5-in., 30c to 35c; 4-in., 20c.

Nephrolepis Scottii, 8-in., as big as a washtub, worth $2.00, now $1.25; 7-in., as big as a bushel basket, worth $1.25, now 75c; 6-in., 50c; 5½-in., 40c; 4-in., 20c.

Holly Ferns, 5c.

Azaleas in bud and bloom—Simon Mardner (pink), Deutsche Perle (double white), Vervaeneana (double rose, variegated), 75c, $1.00, $1.25 to $1.50 each.

Cineraria Hybrida, H. F. Michell's best strain, 2½-in. pots, $4.00 per 100; 3-in. pots, strong plants ready for a shift into 5½ or 6-in. pots, $7.00 per 100; 4 in. pots, $10.00 per 100.

Areca Sapida, 6-in., 50c each.

The Florists' Manual

By WILLIAM SCOTT

Here is a Business Book For Business Men

SECOND EDITION

THOROUGHLY REVISED AND BROUGHT UP TO DATE

NO SCIENCE, BUT LOTS OF PRACTICAL COMMON SENSE

"Find enclosed $5 for the Florists' Manual, by William Scott. It is the best book of the age on commercial floriculture and should be in the home of every gardener."—CONRAD FORBACH, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I have several times been consulted by those who would make a beginning in the Florists' business. In each case I have said that the first step is to subscribe for a Trade Paper, and the next to procure a copy of The Florists' Manual."—J. A. VALENTINE, Pres. Park Floral Co., Denver, Colo.

No dry-as-dust botanical classifications, but tells you just how to produce marketable plants and cut flowers in the best and cheapest way.

TELLS you just what you want to know about every plant that there is any money in for a Commercial Florist.

Treats of over 200 subjects and is freely illustrated with fine half-tone engravings.

AUSTIN, TEX.

The grass is green and outdoor roses are in bloom where protected, an unusual occurrence at this time of year. Two years ago there was not a store in Austin. Now there are two, well stocked and centrally located, besides three seed houses that do a little in plants and flowers, and all are doing well. Carnations and sweet peas are blooming freely and callas are excellent. H. B. B.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

Trade conditions are back to a normal basis and some satisfaction is felt by the majority that the holiday trade passed off as well as it did. Upon interviewing all of the dealers, there is not one but what experienced a good trade and an average increase of from thirty-five per cent to fifty per cent in sales over last year. The heavy plant sales, with some of the trade, worked against the sale of cut flowers, but the good prices obtained for all blooming plants undoubtedly evened things up nicely.

Stock at this writing is not any too good, possibly on account of the dark weather, and further because everything was cut close to supply Christmas trade. A number of Christmas plants carried over are in the hands of about every dealer. Azaleas, it seems, did not sell as well as anticipated. Few poinsettias are to be seen.

Between Christmas and New Year's it was also noticeable that prices dropped considerably and, although the most of the growers tried hard to maintain Christmas figures, it was a hard matter for them to do so. Eastern violets are arriving in large numbers. The color and size of the violet are all that could be expected, but the fragrance is gone by the time it reaches us.

St. Paul.

Jerry Jurgenson, who has been with Holm & Olson, is now connected with the Donaldson greenhouses in Minneapolis.

Holm & Olson report a fair trade last week. Funeral work was heavy. Trade in the social line was quiet.

L. L. May & Co. had the McCormick-Ferguson wedding, which was one of the principal events of the season. The house decorations were quite unique. The stairways were heavily trimmed with wild smilax, poinsettias of a uniform size being interspersed through the smilax, which under the light produced a brilliant effect. Handsome centerpieces of Richmonds on the reception table were fine, solid colors being used throughout.

Colberg & Lemke report trade good, notwithstanding the lull which is expected after the holiday rush. The trade has been mostly for funeral work.

Henry Krinke, one of our oldest florists, has been confined to his bed for the last three weeks, but is gradually improving and will be back to his post in a few weeks' time.

Thomas Cushman, of the Clinton Falls Nursery Co., Owatonna, Minn., called and reports the largest Christmas business he ever had, and was fortunate in having all his roses in crop.

CENTURY INSECTICIDE DEATH TO INSECTS
Cheapest and best on market. Once used, always used.
Positively kills green and black fly, mealy bugs, red spider, scale, thrips, or any insect on flowers, plants, trees, vegetables, etc. Will not injure, scent or discolor the most delicate flowers and foliage. Also sure death to Gypsy and Tussock Moths.
Especially adapted for Roses, Carnations, Chrysanthemums, Heliotrope, Smilax and Ferns. Handled by Leading Seedsmen.
Prepared by W. H. KULD, Norwood, Mass.

CLEVELAND.

Stock in general is slightly improving since January 1. The excellent weather which we have been having for the last few days is largely helping to increase the supply of carnations. All cut flowers are more plentiful and bring reasonable prices.

The Cleveland natural gas supply was put out of commission January 4. The cause was attributed to two mains which burst at Akron, O. All the florists who use natural gas for heating found a ton or two of coal the handiest thing out.

Michael H. Horvath, who for eleven years was city landscape gardener and forester, resigned his position January 1. Mr. Horvath is one of the best known scientific men in this line in the country. The reason he gives for his resignation is, that he will enter into business for himself.

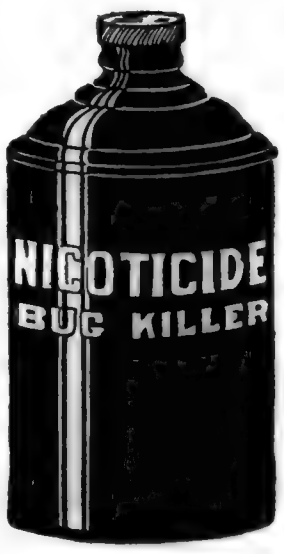
Current Comment.

Another week of clouds and it's a case of "Wait till the sun shines, Nellie," and all will certainly be glad when such a thing happens. It's a long lane that has no turn. New Year's business was good and everything in the shape of a bloom was taken.

Some of the florists here, not being able to get any sunshine, are raising sunbeams; notably, A. F. J. Baur, who is wearing the smile that won't come off. The girl arrived January 3. Both mother and babe are doing well and Adolph is stepping high. Carl Glaubke is in the same class; date of arrival, January 5; all doing well. Carl begs to be excused from the annual meeting.

William Lilly, until recently florist for the waterworks company, is now in California, where he expects to make his home. He writes splendid accounts of the climate and conditions generally.



S. P. Cossairt, Jr., of Shelbyville, is also in the golden state and its charms are such that Hoosierdom will see him no more.

Ed. J. Brown reports the Christmas and New Year's trade in Shelbyville the best ever; he has finished remodeling his plant and is in good shape to handle his spring trade.

From present indications there will be a good attendance at the annual meeting of the State Florists' Association of Indiana, January 8.

The Unconsidered Trifles of a few years ago form the basis of profit and loss today. Keen competition has brought things down to this fine point. Brought it to a point where yearly repair costs, on the ordinary houses, keep a man up to his ears all the time. If you haven't enough money to buy one of our "houses of economy"—then don't build—wait till you can—you will be money in hand in the end. Keep your eye on what we are doing for others, then you'll know exactly what we can do for you. Write us.

THERE ARE TWO WORDS APPLYING TO GROWERS

that we want to call your attention to—they are Pride and Prejudice. Every one of you growers has a great pride in what you grow; it's doubtful if any profession is as keenly alert to what is doing or as persistently ambitious for results—but by the same token, the profession has the strongest sort of prejudices; the kind that frequently lead them to continue erecting houses with cumbersome supports and "old-timey" gutters or some other equally unfortunate thing—just because there are some few things about the house they like—they are "used to." When you get so "used to a thing" that it stands right in the middle of the road of progress, you can depend upon it, your up-to-date competitor is getting away your business, reducing your profits.

There's a moral to it all. You can meet up-to-date competition with up-to-date houses only. You can buy up-to-date houses from up-to-date firms only. The L & B Iron Frame Houses are the up-to-date houses, the houses you need. Send at once for Iron Frame Circular.

OUR CARNATION NOVELTIES FOR 1907

Winsor, White Enchantress and Helen M. Gould

ONE way to judge carnations is to see them on the exhibition tables. A better and more convincing way is to see them growing; therefore we cordially invite all carnation growers to visit us and judge for themselves regarding the superiority of the above named sorts.

Our carnation houses are at SCARBOROUGH-ON-HUDSON (not Tarrytown). Friends who desire to visit us can take the N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. from New York. Trains leave there every half hour. Scarborough is the first station north of Tarrytown. Our grounds adjoin the station, and the greenhouses are about five minutes' walk from the station.

We are growing 25,000 PLANTS OF WINSOR for cut flowers alone, for the New York market this season, which shows the faith we have in it. This will also enable visitors to see it growing in quantity, and, besides that will give us enough plants to get a great abundance of fine, healthy cuttings without over-propagating. We have already booked a large quantity among the large growers, and anticipate for this variety the largest sale of any new carnation that has ever been distributed, as large growers who have seen it are enthusiastic in regard to its value. Those who have seen it have immediately placed large orders for it, so we recommend those who have not ordered to place order without delay, so as to ensure early delivery.

For full description of these three valuable novelties, see our Wholesale Price List. Of course, we shall have all of these varieties on exhibition at Toronto, where they can be seen, and where they will speak for themselves.

Wholesale Prices, Rooted Cuttings, Spring 1907

WINSOR. Soft silvery pink. The best color, best keeper, best shipper, best seller—best every way. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

WHITE ENCHANTRESS. Has the large size, long stem, productive habit of Enchantress, but it is pure white. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

HELEN M. GOULD. A beautiful sport of Enchantress. Ground color lovely shade of silvery pink, with very fine pencilings of carmine, making an exceedingly exquisite combination. While on close observation this variety is variegated, the general effect is one beautiful tone of dark pink. Exceedingly valuable, because it combines the earliness, freedom, long stem, and large size of Enchantress, giving another color possessing all the other desirable qualities of Enchantress. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

BEACON. Orange-scarlet. A vigorous, healthy grower, of ideal habit. A profuse bloomer, with long stems. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

ARISTOCRAT. Cerise-pink. Will be planted largely in place of Lawson. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

MELODY. Daybreak sport of Lawson, about the same color as Enchantress, but much brighter, and does not fade like Enchantress. Also a much better keeper and shipper. Those who grow the Lawson varieties exclusively will find this very valuable and desirable, because it gives an improved Enchantress color, which is so popular, and at the same time can be grown in the same house with the other Lawsons. An extra fine thing in every way and in great demand. A great addition to the Lawson class. $10.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000.

ROSE-PINK ENCHANTRESS. A sport of Enchantress. Color, dark rose-pink. $7.00 per 100; $60.00 per 1000.

WHITE PERFECTION. A novelty of 1906, and a variety for which there is a great demand this season. A third larger than Lady Bountiful and a more perfect flower. $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000.

VICTORY. Scarlet. This is giving great satisfaction, being a free blooming, profitable scarlet. $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000.

RED LAWSON. A fine red. Our stock of this is superior to many stocks of Red Lawson that we have seen. $4.00 per 100; $30.00 per 1000.

VARIEGATED LAWSON. The most productive of the variegated sorts. A favorite. Outblooms Mrs. M. A. Patten. $4.00 per 100; $30.00 per 1000.

WHITE LAWSON. An excellent white. $4.00 per 100; $30.00 per 1000.

LADY BOUNTIFUL. Pure white. $4.00 per 100; $30.00 per 1000.

ENCHANTRESS. $3.00 per 100; $25.00 per 1000.

MRS. M. A. PATTEN. $3.00 per 100; $25.00 per 1000.

MRS. THOS. W. LAWSON. $3.00 per 100; $20.00 per 1000.

NOW IS THE TIME TO BEGIN!

CARNATIONS

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

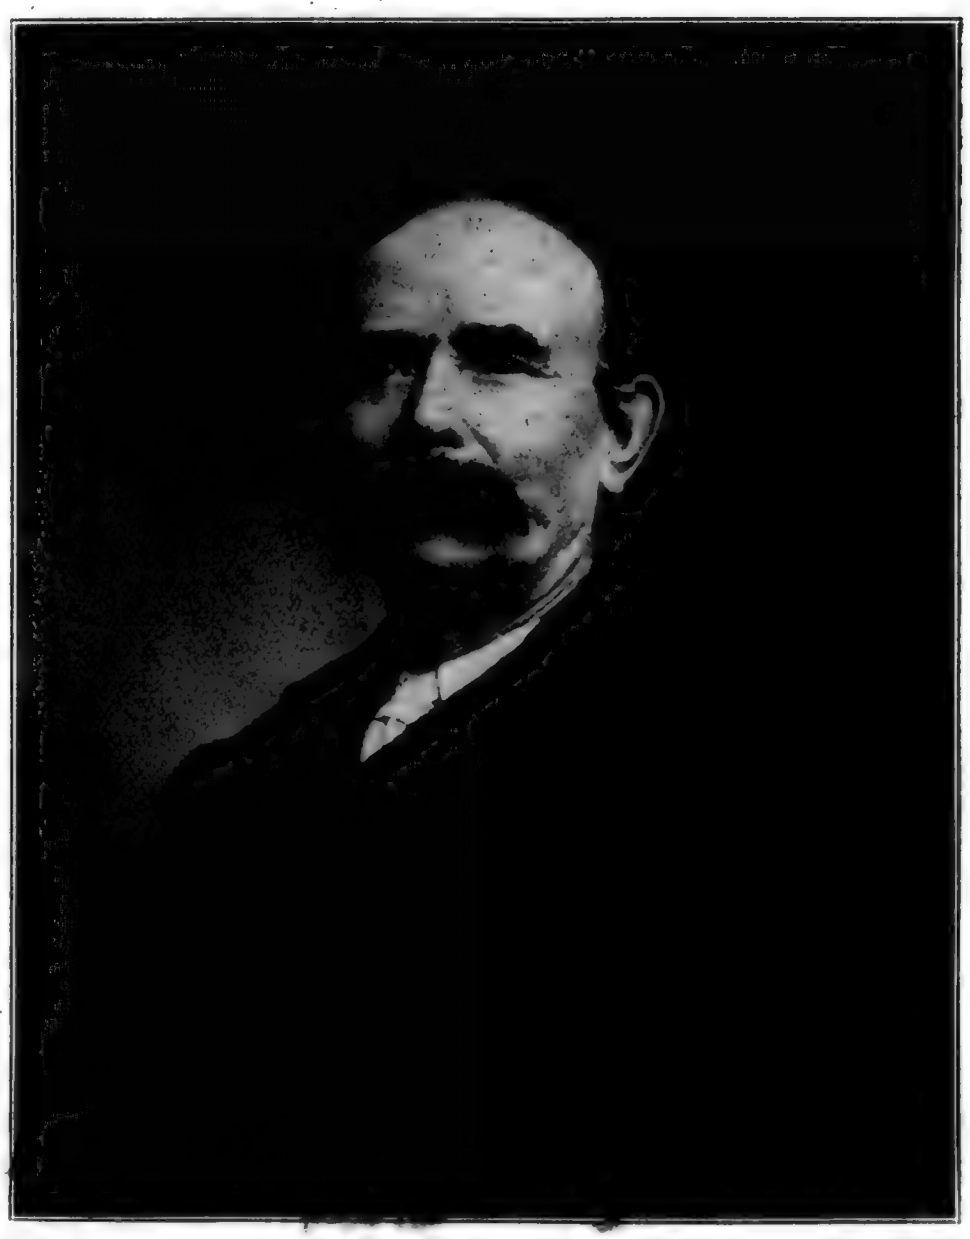
Care of Cuttings.

From now on you will be getting in whatever carnation cuttings you buy this season and a few reminders of how to care for them when they come in will not be amiss.

First of all we have found it advisable not to allow the express companies to deliver our goods, and, unless they will send them right up to your place, you may find it advisable to do the same when the weather is severe. You can imagine what shape they are likely to be in after being hauled around town in an unheated wagon for a couple of hours in zero weather. Have them call you by phone and then you can send for them at once and take proper precaution against the cold.

If you think the box has been exposed to the cold and frost may have penetrated the covering, then do not unpack right away, at least not in a warm room. Let the box stand a few hours in about 50 degrees to allow the frost to draw out slowly, and in many cases no harm will be done; whereas, if they were exposed to a warm temperature at once, many would be lost. The sudden change will do more damage than the freezing unless it is severe.

After unpacking, get them potted as quickly as possible, using the same pots and soil as for your own stock. If any happen to be unrooted or have the roots broken off in packing, then stick all such into your propagating bench. They will root better there than in the pots and when you pay a good price, such as you do for all the later introductions, you do not want to lose any of them.



Lay newspapers over them the first day or two, even if the sun does not shine; it will get them gradually accustomed to the light after being packed up tight several days. You will likely have to shade them rrom the sun a few days longer than your own, but shade them only as long as the sun seems to hurt them.

The Case for Damages.

If you receive a batch in poor condition notify the shipper at once. Do not wait until you see how many you will lose. You may be honest enough and you may save all that could be saved, yet at the same time, he is apt to think the loss may have been caused by neglect on your part; whereas, if you notify him at once, he will know that they arrived in bad shape and will not lay the blame at your door. It is easier to place the blame where it belongs when the facts are still fresh in his memory, and it will be easier to collect damages from the express company if the case warrants such proceedings.

As to the advisability of asking for damages from the express companies, each case must determine that for itself. But we hold that if a parcel is delivered to them in good condition and plainly and conspicuously marked as to its contents and necessity of preservation from frost, etc., and they delay the transit unreasonably, or expose it unreasonably, then they should be held responsible. Many cases are known where flagrant carelessness was the only reason for the damage done and the collection of damages is the surest way of getting proper service.

Of course one must use good judgment and be reasonable in all such cases, and be sure you place the blame where it belongs. Faulty packing and failure to make proper allowance for the severity of the weather are sometimes the main causes of freezing; but as a rule the shippers will pack reasonably warm. A. F. J. BAUR.

George H. Mills.

WEAK-STEMMED CARNATIONS.

Can you tell me the cause of my carnations growing weak stems? I benched them about August 25 and they were all good, strong plants. When I came to fill my benches I found that I did not have enough soil in my compost, so I mixed in several loads of soil, good, clay loam, from a field that had been pastured for the last eight years and was plowed up last spring. The plants all did well from the beginning and I lost only a few. I used no bone meal at the time of planting, but I gave them a dressing of wood ashes about October 1 and then thirty pounds of bone meal to 500 square feet of bench about November 1. Then about December 15 I gave them another dressing of wood ashes. They have made a good growth, but the following varieties are making weak stems: Flora Hill, Glacier, Peru, Mrs. E. A. Nelson and Enchantress. I have other varieties which are doing well and all have been treated the same. Lawson, White Lawson and Flora Hill have been kept at a temperature of about 54 degrees; the others, from 50 to 52 degrees.

Have I overfed them? I have given them all the air possible. I thought the long spell of cloudy weather might have something to do with it. The stems are of good length and the blooms are of fair size. R. M.

It is rather difficult to say what may be causing your carnations to come weak-stemmed. As far as you state the facts your treatment has been all right and should result in good stock. Flora Hill and Peru will come rather weak at this time of the year, whatever you do; but the others should hold the bloom up well. Excessive cloudy weather will, of course, cause all kinds of stock to come soft and weak-stemmed unless you handle them accordingly. Your temperatures are all right and the food you gave them is all right, except I would have advised you to put some bone into the soil at planting time.

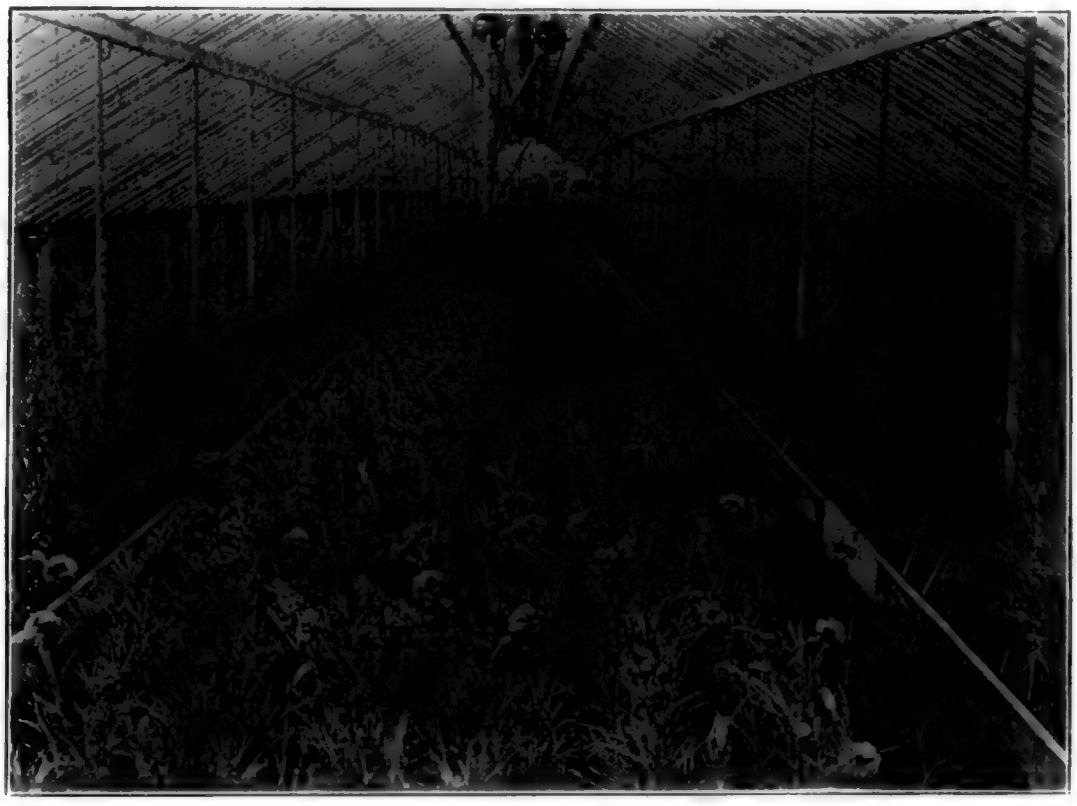
If your soil is of a light texture you would naturally have more trouble along this line than you would with a good heavy loam. A soil that makes lots of growth does not necessarily make good stems and blooms. If your plants were exceptionally large at planting time they may be too crowded by now, which would also cause a weak growth.

I would advise you to keep the ventilators open all the time, especially when you are firing heavily. This may seem like wasting fuel, but you will find it will pay you well. If you can get some sheep manure, then tie half a bushel in a burlap bag and hang it in a 50-gallon barrel of water. After three or four days use this liquid, mixed half and half with clear water, and apply it about once in ten days and when you get bright weather give it to them once each week. Get a Kinney pump; it will save you much labor in the operation and you won't mind the job half so much. A little later, when evaporation is more rapid, a mulch of old stable manure will do them good. A. F. J. B.

ROBERT CRAIG CARNATION.

I would like to know if Robert Craig carnation is giving satisfaction. I got fifty plants in the spring. I find it a strong grower, but there are too many split and off-colored flowers. I can't lay it to cultivation, as it makes a good stem twenty-four inches and over and the perfect flowers come about three and one-half inches and over. I have Lawson, Enchantress and Boston Market, all doing well. Is Craig a desirable carnation to plant in quantity?

G. H.



Robert Craig is doing splendidly with us and we consider it a good thing and worth planting in quantity. The growth is strong and the stems are fine. Blooms are large, well formed and of a deep rich red. It is not early with us and not so free as Victory, but it throws up its stems quickly and produces more blooms than one would be led to think by the appearance of the plants. It will have to bring the top price to be really profitable, but it will do this right along on account of its unfailing quality. Other growers with whom I have talked seem to hold the same opinion.

We have noticed three or four plants among our stock which produce off-colored blooms, which we cannot account for. Better not propagate from such plants. This need not necessarily be a weakness in the variety, but it may be simply a bud variation, the same as any other sport. If it happened to be some desirable color you would save it and call it a sport; in this case it is a rogue. A. F. J. B.

McKINLEY DAY.

Retailers everywhere should look forward to McKinley day, January 29, and each should do his share to stimulate the public interest. McKinley day will die an untimely death unless the trade does something to keep alive the spirit. Tell your local newspaper men of it and get them each to publish a little note to the effect that on January 29 everyone who voted for McKinley, or who reveres his memory, will wear a carnation. Refer to McKinley day in your local advertising and wherever possible give the sentiment a start on the morning of McKinley day by seeing that people on their way to work wear carnations. Last year one retailer did a good turn by decorating with a boutonniere every street car employee before the cars left the barns in the morning. Another started the business by putting boys at nearby street corners witn small baskets of blooms to sell at a nickel apiece to the people on the streets.

It would be the greatest mistake to undertake to advance the price of carnations for January 29, and growers need make no special preparations for the day. If the normal production can be put upon the streets that day it will be entirely satisfactory.

House of Aristocrat at Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., Photographed September 1, 1906.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

The Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., registers Carnation Beau Brummel, a large white overlaid with crimson, on the order of Prosperity, having more color than this variety; a cross between a white seedling and Harlowarden; an early, free and continuous bloomer, producing large well-formed flowers on good, strong stems.

Baur & Smith, Indianapolis, Ind., register Carnation Saint Nicholas, the brightest scarlet we have ever seen in any carnation, exactly identical with the geranium, Trego, in color; does not dull in aging; large bloom on fine, long and strong stem and very free; at its best during midwinter but comes in early and continues late; clean, vigorous, upright grower, with strong constitution; both parents seedlings.

Baur & Smith also register Carnation May, a full shade deeper and brighter than Enchantress; bloom of large size and well formed; opens up the center petals as soon as the bloom is unfolded; good substance and never bursts the calyx; stem of good medium length and strong as Lawson. A fine, healthy grower and very free; comes in very early and never lets up until midsummer; both parents are seedlings.

ALBERT M. HERR, Sec'y.

CARNATION WINSOR.

At Scarboro, N. Y., the next station to Tarrytown, a few miles higher up the Hudson, there is a wonderful transformation occurring, for here on newly purchased land, coming right down to the railroad station, the F. R. Pierson Co. is establishing one of the most picturesque and beautifully located nurseries in America. The grounds at present cover nearly sixty acres and many fine collections are to be seen. Here, too, there is being brought into existence a great range of glass. In addition to eight older rose houses each 300 feet long, there have recently been built three plant houses over 300 feet in length and from fifty to sixty feet in width. One of these houses, built on the U-bar design, is shown in the accompanying illustration. It is planted with the new Winsor carnation. This particular house is 50x300 feet, heated and ventilated by the latest improvements. In it are ten solid beds divided half way by a 6-foot passageway. In these beds are planted 15,000 Winsor and on these plants, by a carefully counted bench, a fair average would place the number of visible buds and blooms on these 15,000 plants that day, January 9, at 165,000.

Winsor is a seedling raised from Daybreak and Albertina on Lawson, resulting in an entirely distinct variety, yet retaining all that which is best in its triple parentage. If there is any predominant element it is that which distinguishes the Lawson. Its healthy and profuse foliage is, if anything, a shade lighter than that of the above mentioned variety. Its flowers are borne on stiff stems, from fourteen to twenty-four inches in length. There is none of that brittleness about the stem that characterizes some other varieties. Not a single bursted calyx was discernible. In size the flower is the equal of Lawson.

There are three benches of Winsor planted two years ago. They have never been disturbed, merely receiving the ordinary culture necessary to stock plants. Today they are a mass of healthy foliage, blooms and buds. Twelve thousand plants were put out in solid beds from 2½-inch pots last June. Large cuts were made early in October. In November 10,000 blooms were picked; in December, 20,000, and it is figured January will give 30,000. The yield at present for these 12,000 plants averages 1,000 blooms a day. It apparently is not a cropper. It brought $20 per hundred wholesale at Christmas and now averages from $8 to $12.

Because this house has solid beds it must not be inferred that the Pierson Co. either argues in favor of this system or that Winsor is particularly susceptible to its advantages, for in one of the other large houses mentioned it is shown grown on benches and looks just as well. For instance, the plants on one elevated bench were from 2¼-inch pots and planted August 1. Flowers were gathered from these in October and there is a fine crop now on. This particular bench is the wonder and admiration of all visitors.

Winsor made a hit at the fall shows and will be much in evidence at Toronto next week. It looks a good thing and will be widely tried next season.

THE TORONTO CONVENTION.

The Event of the Carnation Year.

Next week the greatest event of the year as regards the carnation industry takes place at Toronto. It would be difficult to estimate in dollars and cents what this annual event is worth to the carnation industry and, in fact, to the whole floricultural world. Its influence is felt in every branch of the business, and especially does it directly benefit the locality in which the convention is held. Nothing will bring this flower before the public as do these exhibitions; and in every case a larger demand for high grade blooms follows. The sacrifices and expenses incurred by any florists' club or society in entertaining this society is quickly repaid in that way. There is no movement that can be and deserves more universal support from the whole craft than does this society. All benefit in about the same degree and, being national in extent, local jealousies are more easily kept in the background than in the case of local exhibitions.

Personal Benefit.

Just how much you benefit by its work and influence will depend, in a large measure, on your own efforts. No man gains prominence by sitting back and folding his hands. The men who gain prominence are those who take active part in whatever is doing and are always ready and willing, and it is prominence that draws business. It makes no difference whether you are grower, retailer or commission man; whenever your patrons recognize the fact that you are prominent in your profession, they gain respect for you and, other things being equal, they will trade with you in preference to your less prominent competitor. You don't need to be president, either, but it is a good idea to be pres-ent.

If you are in a little town and your townsmen hear that you traveled a thousand miles to attend the convention they will sit up and take notice. We have members in our state society who declare that the fact that they come to our city and occasionally win a premium, causes their city to feel that they are about the whole show, and trade follows.

Make an Exhibit.

If you have some good stock take some along and see how it compares with the best there is, and show others what you can do. It will be a great satisfaction to yourself if it grades up to the best, and will win you respect from the others. If you have a pet seedling of your own, and I'll guarantee that you have, you can find out whether it will "trot" or not. If it is a crackerjack you will be able to confirm your good opinion.

Just how full developed the blooms should be when you pack them up will depend somewhat on the distance you have to ship them. If the distance is short they can be cut quite full when they are packed, but if shipped a long distance you would better allow for development on the way. A fully developed bloom will suffer much more in transit than a young bloom and there is considerable development during a two-days' journey.

Be sure the blooms are in good shipping condition. They should be in water several hours before being packed; and do not crowd them in the vases, but allow each bloom to stand out separate, so it can develop all around. Try to have your blooms reach the show in such condition that they will last through the two days. They may not score quite so high the first day, but if your variety is one of the few that look fresh on the second day it will gain many friends, especially if it is a new one. Those are the things that are jotted down in the note books and made use of in the future when orders are placed.

There are many styles of packing, and each prominent grower has his own ideas along that line. But two things I want to say: Don't use ice, but scatter wet sphagnum between the stems and cleat them so they cannot move around.

A. F. J. BAUR.

INDIANA FLORISTS' OFFICERS.

Herman Junge.

Herman Junge, president of the State Florists' Association of Indiana, was born in Weimar, Germany, in 1865. After graduating from high school he served a three years' apprenticeship with the head gardener of the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar. He came to America in 1890 and, after a brief stay with Peter Henderson & Co. in New York, he went to Denver, Colorado.

He located in Indianapolis in 1892 and in 1894 formed a partnership with Carl Sonnenschmidt, an old schoolmate. As the combination of these two names proved too much for the American jaw, the firm name was changed to plain Smith & Young Co. Besides the older establishment in the city of Indianapolis, with its 20,000 feet of glass, they now own a range of 30,000 feet of glass on a twenty-five-acre tract near Cumberland, Indiana. Both cut flowers and plants are grown, the firm having achieved an especially good reputation for its success with violets.

A. F. J. Baur.

The name of A. F. J. Baur, now secretary of the State Florists' Association of Indiana, will be recognized by the trade as that of the author of carnation notes and answers to carnation queries in the REVIEW.

Mr. Baur was born January 9, 1876, at Bloomfield, Pa. His father was a clergyman and the family lived in several places; but the lad attended school in whatever locality their home chanced to be until he was 13 years old. At this age he was sent to F. Morat's Sons, at Louisville, Ky., where he worked in the greenhouse for two years. After this he went to work for the E. G. Hill Co., of Richmond, Ind., January 21, 1891. He remained with this firm five years, having charge, at different times, of the carnations and exhibition mums, the latter in 1893, 1894 and 1895. It was while at this place that Mr. Baur became interested in plant breeding and in carnations; and here under his hand originated Triumph, Armazindy and Flora Hill.

It was December 11, 1895, when he went to Stuart & Haugh, at Anderson, Ind., to grow roses, and January 1, 1897, before he had reached his twenty-first birthday, he became foreman of H. A. Niemeyer's place, at Erie, Pa. He remained with this firm two years, then took a similar position with Charles Siebert, of Pittsburg, but remained there only five months.

Mr. Baur formed the partnership with F. S. Smith, who was also a graduate from the Hill establishment, May 20, 1899, and together they leased the Bernie Fohl place, at Indianapolis, where they have been ever since. The firm of Baur & Smith has enjoyed continued prosperity, having trebled its capacity since starting. In 1905 they started a new place, building one house 30x355, to which they are this season adding another of the same dimensions. Seeing the possibilities for high-grade carnations soon after locating in Indianapolis, they have devoted nearly the whole place to them and have built up a splendid trade, both in blooms and rooted cuttings.

Mr. Baur has been writing carnation notes for the REVIEW since 1900 and has answered hundreds of inquiries in regard to the culture of this flower. He married April 10, 1901, Miss Elma Steinkamp, of Richmond, Ind., and their first born, a daughter, came January 3 of this year. Mr. Baur is a member of the American Carnation Society.

John Heidenreich.

John Heidenreich.

John Heidenreich, the treasurer of the State Florists' Association of Indiana, was born in Germany in 1866 and came to American when only 18 years of age. For seven years he worked in the establishments of many florists in many cities and gained a wide knowledge of the business, finally bringing up at Indianapolis, where he started in business for himself in 1901 at Applegate and Iowa streets, where he now has a range of about 22,000 square feet of glass. He is an expert plantsman and makes a specialty of spring plants for the wholesale market in Indianapolis.

PRESIDENT TOTTY'S INAUGURAL.

[Charles H. Totty's inaugural address, delivered before the New York Florists' Club, at its meeting January 10, 1907.]

In assuming the office of president of this organization, permit me to say first of all, that it is not my wish or desire to deviate in the least degree from the policy that has successfully marked the terms of my predecessors in office. The club is making history rapidly, both in the increase in membership and in the regard with which it is considered by the outside horticultural world, and it will be my chief aim to throw no obstacle in the path of its progress.

No Change in Policy.

There are one or two suggestions that I will speak on before I close, but they are not of such moment as to be considered any change in policy or in any way revolutionary.

That I appreciate the honor you have done me in electing me as your president goes without saying. As I look around I see many good members here who are more entitled to this office than I am; men who have borne the heat and burden of the day, in the old days when it was more or less of a struggle to keep the organization on its feet. To these members who are now willing to stand aside and let the younger men push along the car of progress I feel doubly grateful.

A suggestion was made to me by W. J. Stewart, president of the S. A. F., that this club should appoint a committee on closer relations with the S. A. F. This suggestion I consider is a valuable one and would like to see it come up for discussion later in the evening and such a committee appointed. In unity there is strength, and if all the horticultural societies in the country had trust that members will avail themselves of this aid to knowledge, for in the multitude of counsel there is wisdom.

Outing and Entertainment.

It has been suggested that the outing committee find a new place to hold the picnic this year, or suggest some change in that method of enjoyment. I trust the new committee will grapple with the problem and be ready with any changes they may deem worth trying and present them at an early date for the club's consideration. The outing is the children's day and I trust we will be able to arrange an enjoyable affair, without having a heavy burden of work and worry fall on the heads of a faithful committee for their pains.

Bowling is an enjoyable pastime, and most of our cities have a bowling team in connection with their florists' club. It is to me a matter of regret that New York makes such a wretched showing at the annual meetings of the S. A. F. Will it never be possible for the club to render some assistance, to organize a bowling club for members only and give us a chance to win some of the splendid trophies annually competed for? I would much like to hear some discussion on this subject.

It has been suggested that the annual dinner be held at a new hotel or some means be adopted to make this an event that every member of the club will be anxious to participate in. If any member has any suggestions to offer, under this head, it will be necessary to do so tonight, as the dinner committee will get to work at once.

A Permanent Home.

I would like to see some provision made before long for a permanent home for the club. This is a thing that cana connection with each other, through the S. A. F., it might be that much good could come through it. The primary object of all such organizations as this is the advance of floriculture and as the keynote in all lines of business life now is coöperation, so could we, by coöperating with kindred bodies, accomplish much more in a given time.

The Private Gardener.

We are a body chartered under the name of the New York Florists' Club. Whether this name has in the past acted as some of our members think it has to keep out a large body of private gardeners, who as practical horticulturists would be valuable men in our ranks, is an open question. But if such an idea does exist, we should endeavor to find ways and means to correct such a misunderstanding. Whether this could best be done by personal solicitation or through the operation of a special committee I leave to you, but I would like to see an effort made to induce very many more of the private growers to join us.

I trust the award committee will, as in the past, use their best judgment in scoring exhibits, so that the seal of this club's approval, being placed on any new variety of plant or flower, will mean that that particular variety is worthy of such an honor. Let us by all means keep our merit marks up to the standard and be governed, as in the past, by an honest and conservative estimate of the novelties put before us.

The question box has been useful in the past and can be made so again. I not be done in a month or a year, but we could make a start, looking to that end. I would favor the appointment of a building committee, if the club as a body think well of the idea; this committee to look the field over and study out ways and means to acquire title to property in the name of the club.

We have many good, successful business men in the club and I am confident that a representative committee could evolve a financial plan whereby this idea could be made feasible and I leave it with you for your careful and serious consideration. We must not be hasty in action on such a proposition, either to accept or reject it; but I do trust that every member will think it over in his own mind and come prepared at some future meeting to talk on the subject intelligently.

In conclusion, fellow members, I beg of you to give me your encouragement and support during the coming year. Attend all the meetings you possibly can. Bear with my mistakes until I have familiarized myself with my duties, and in return, I promise to give this club the best that is in me.

CLEANING GREENHOUSE GLASS.

I have about 9,000 feet of glass and started to scrub it first with strong lye, then with soap powder, but had no success with either. The glass is so smoky and dirty that if a man walks along outside he cannot be seen at all, and I must get it off. I would highly appreciate any information to assist me in my undertakings. J. P. H.

If lye applied to the glass will not remove the dust and smoke we don't know what will. Perhaps you did not go at it in a very effectual way. Tie a bunch of rags on the end of a pole, saturate the rags in the lye water and rub them over the glass and before the glass is dry rub it with another bunch of rags. Have a helper playing the hose on the glass. Lye will take off paint, much less smoke. The man with the hose can keep the glass wet a few feet beyond you and wash off what you have rubbed off with the rags and lye water. Where lead and oil have been foolishly used on the glass for a summer shade we have known it to be necessary to sprinkle the glass with lye water and then get on the roof with scrubbing brushes. W. S.

CYANIDE.

Please give me a safe and efficient receipt for fumigating 9,100 feet, with top and side ventilation. My potassium cyanide seems to be strong, as it bleached some carnation buds and the Asparagus plumosus. A. W.

I could easily give you my formula for the poison, but it appears that cyanide is often of different degrees of strength and that would make a difference in quantity needed.

Our formula, which we have often used and found safe and efficient, is one pint water and one pint in weight of sulphuric acid. Mix the water and acid in a gallon butter jar and, if more than one jar is needed, place the jars equally divided on the floor of the greenhouse path. At sunset add to each jar two and one-half ounces of cyanide of potassium. Have each little parcel of cyanide done up in double paper. Start at one end of the house and walk along and drop the parcel of cyanide into the jar of water and acid. If there are two paths, then you will need an assistant, but there is not the slightest danger if you both go right along, neither ahead of the other, as it takes a minute or so for gas to be generated. As your house contains 9,100 cubic feet of atmosphere, then you will need six jars.

The above formula is for 1,500 cubic feet of atmosphere. Keep the ventilators closed all night.

If you have not given me the cubic feet, I suppose you know to get it; find out how many superficial feet there are in the gable end of your greenhouse and multiply by the length of the house. Don't go to the village store for your cyanide; go to a wholesale druggist in your nearest large city. W. S.

REFUSE HOPS.

Please let me know if brewery hops, that is, waste, make as good a dressing as cow manure, as cow manure is becoming scarce. A. L.

I am unable to say what chemical properties refuse hops contain, but having used hundreds of tons I can say something about them. They heat most violently if left in a heap for a few days and this makes them a valuable ingredient for a hotbed mixed with leaves. I have ploughed them into the sand and they have raised great crops of wheat and other grain. I have used a fifth of hops to four-fifths of soil for carnation benches and picked more flowers of old varieties, as Edwardsii, than I ever have since.

When partially decomposed, so that they will run through a coarse sieve they make the finest of fertilizers for geraniums, begonias, fuchsias, in fact, any of our greenhouse plants, except roses. As a mulch they are unequaled for transplanted trees and shrubs. For plunging plants on a greenhouse bench they are unequaled. It is not an article to be compared with cow manure. It contains little or no ammonia, but its mechanical effect on the soil is wonderful.

Why we don't use much of it of late years is because brewers use less hops and the farmers have learned the value of them and are glad to cart them away. W. S.

PROPAGATION BY GRAFTING.

There are many different styles of grafting, but the style followed by most rose growers for indoor stock is the style called whip grafting, or some modification of the same. As speed and expediency are the principal objects to be obtained, nearly every propagator has his own favorite style, which is the one he is usually most proficient in.

The manual part of this operation, although quite simple, seems at first irksome and difficult to those who have had no experience in this class of work; and they are usually afraid to make a trial, the bogie of failure being ever present in their minds.

The fundamental principle pertaining to all styles of grafting is the necessity of having a direct communication between the layers of inner bark in all the parts to be united, as without this a perfect union cannot be effected. The woody parts of the stock and scion never unite, but are usually so covered up by the outer growth, that unless the parts be dissected it is never discovered.

The usual style of modified whip grafting is performed somewhat as follows: place the pot containing the stock firmly between the knees, then with a keen edged knife begin about one-half an inch above the soil in the pot and make an oblique cut upward. This cut should be from one-half an inch to three-quarters of an inch in length. Pick out a scion as nearly as possible the same diameter as the stock and make a similar cut thereon, but reversed. Place the wounds together and wrap firmly but not tightly, with some soft material, such as soft cotton twine or raffia.

The plants should, without delay be placed in the grafting box, as any lengthened exposure to the dry atmosphere is apt to shrivel the scion. Immediately after being placed in the case the whole should receive a good sprinkling and kept moist for some time.

This method of grafting seems to the uninitiated a very slow business, but a little experience and attending to the principles and details will insure speed and success.

The future care of the stock while in the case and after its removal to the bench will form the basis of a future article. Ribes.

OUTDOOR ROSES FOR CUTTING.

In the Review of January 10, under the above heading, B. S. asks for the best varieties. In addition to Mr. Scott's remarks allow me to say that if B. S. will adhere closely to his advice as regards soil, etc., and observe the following he will strike the nail on the head.

About May 1 select plants from 2½-inch pots, of such varieties of the teas and hybrid teas as are ordinarily strong growers, eliminating none because of their supposed tenderness. Rather bear in mind the colors most desired. Plant in beds or rows. If conditions are right the product should be considerable the first summer.

In the fall after hard frosts and before winter, usually in Ohio about November 1, carefully loosen the soil around the stem of each plant; bend the plant flat to the ground and cover entirely with at least two inches of soil; three inches will be better. When completed, the bed or row should show no signs of the contents. On top of this place a good coating of strawy manure. It is better to defer this last operation for a couple of weeks, or until the ground is frozen an inch or more in depth. Evergreen boughs, corn fodder or other litter on top of the whole will be an advantage in the northern latitudes, but not absolutely necessary.

The object is not to prevent the roses from freezing, but to rather prevent their thawing on every bright day during winter. The reasons for this are apparent and need no explanation.

The following year, when outdoor vegetation shows signs of spring, uncover the plants carefully and straighten by firming the soil with the foot. Then use the knife fearlessly. Cut everything back to mere stubs, and short stubs at that. Leave nothing over two inches from main stem. In this manner you concentrate all growth into the base buds.

The tenderest roses should winter perfectly in this manner any place in the United States. In our northern latitudes there are localities where they are subject to thaws and warm spells in winter. There I would advise a heavier covering for reasons above stated. Repeat the process from year to year, bearing in mind to loosen the soil around the stems before bending down. The reasons for this are apparent. Use the knife more freely each season, aiming to hold the bushes to a medium size. In fact, they should not be allowed to increase much after the second season. To maintain fertility depend upon the top dressing of manure and bone meal.

I should perhaps say that while all varieties will prove hardy under this treatment, not all varieties will produce good results. There are some sorts of teas and hybrid teas that are especially good outdoor bedders. These are what you want to tie to. S. C. TEMPLIN.

SWEET PEAS CLOSING.

What is the best way to keep sweet peas after being cut? Mine close tight after being cut. S. P.

Sweet peas open very slowly in dark, dull weather and unless fully open will close on the plant about 5 p. m. We think you have picked the flowers before they were sufficiently open. Unlike many of our commercial flowers, which increase in size when cut and put in water, the sweet peas, especially cut before they are fully out, do not develop a particle after being cut. Let your flowers be more fully open and I don't think you will complain of their closing. W. S.

PREVENTS FROST ON WINDOWS.

One cold day last winter when B. Eschner, whom everybody knows, was sitting, with his ear muffs down, his mittens and his rubbers on, behind a frost-covered hotel window waiting for train time, he ran across the following in a paper:

"This has been a bad winter for the storekeeper in more ways than one. And one of the ways has been the frosting of the show windows. Burning gas in the windows to keep off the frost is unsatisfactory. Many storemen run electric fans in the windows and this in a measure keeps down the ice, but it is detrimental to the stock in the window. For this purpose the Pharmaceutische Zeitung recommends the application of a mixture consisting of fifty-five grams of glycerine dissolved in one liter of sixty-two per cent alcohol, containing, to improve the odor, some oil of amber. 'As soon as the mixture clarifies, it is rubbed over the inner surface of the glass. This treatment, it is claimed, not only prevents the formation of frost, but also stops sweating.'

LATE BULBS.

I have a number of bulbs left from my fall sales and have not had time to get them out and would like to know if there is any way I can use them. Can I get them ready for Easter? I have tulips, narcissi, Dutch and Roman hyacinths. W. C. W.

You can plant your tulips, hyacinths and narcissi in flats three inches deep and place them in a frame and cover with three or four inches of soil. They will be in fine order for Easter forcing and you will find the quality of flowers quite as good as those you planted in October and November.

As a proof of this, some years ago it froze up before we had filled an order for a customer in the fall and we had to wait until our January thaw, which usually occurs. It was the middle of January before we got them into the ground and they gave us splendid flowers in April and May. Get your bulbs into good, friable soil at once and you are all right. W. S.

SEEDING OF LORRAINE.

In the issue of the Gardeners' Chronicle for December 15 there was a note on Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, by B. Cromwell as follows: "The stock was raised by leaf propagation from cuttings, and from seed, the latter germinating on the surface of the pans, which last year were suspended in the corridor, thus showing clearly that B. Gloire de Lorraine will reproduce itself from seed providing the atmospheric surroundings are suitable."

There are many growers who have yet to learn that Begonia Gloire de Lorraine does produce seed. We shall be much surprised if the note by Mr. Cromwell does not fall as a bombshell on the ears of many professional men. The theory that hybrids are not capable of reproducing themselves by seed is, we know, gradually being broken down; but that B. Gloire de Lorraine is assisting in upsetting this theory is somewhat surprising. The number of articles that have been published during the past fifteen years, in reference to the propagation and cultivation of this plant are enormous; but we do not recollect reading of anyone being successful in the saving of seed, at least with one exception. A note appeared in the Gardeners' Chronicle about six years ago. It had been inserted by a leading firm of nurserymen, and stated that they had been successful in the raising (not saving) of seed, and that they hoped at a future date to be in a position to exhibit the plants at a meeting of the Royal Horticultural Society. Whether they had the "honor" of doing this we trow not.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Bougainvilleas.

If you have any bougainvilleas that have been resting it is time to get them into a warmer house and freely water and syringe them. They will break from the ripened wood and the breaks will be flowers.

Gardenias.

You can put in cuttings of gardenias now. The very tender, young growths are not suitable for cuttings. What florists call the half-ripened wood of last fall is more suitable for cuttings. Put them in sand where the bottom heat is 70 degrees and they will soon root. We lately saw a lot of gardenias from which we thought something might be learned. These were a lot in 6-inch pots that had been lifted from a bed where they had been planted out. The foliage was yellow, as it had been on the plants before lifting, while half a dozen large plants in 9-inch pots were as green as bay trees and covered with buds. Possibly while planted out the smaller plants were overwatered, and, it being a rather cool house for gardenias, the plants could not use all the material given them; while the larger plants were a mass of roots and did absorb all the moisture provided them.

Dutch Hyacinths.

You can bring into the greenhouse now at any time a few hundred pots of Dutch hyacinth. They are always welcome. Give them, after the first few days inside, a temperature of 60 degrees to 65 degrees and they soon will be in flower. The first batch will take two weeks longer to come into flower than do succeeding crops.

Fuchsias.

You should put in all the vigorous fuchsia cuttings this month. Fuchsias put in the sand this month will make quick growing, vigorous plants that will be in flower in May. After the end of this month you can no longer get good fuchsia cuttings. The old plants are so anxious to grow the cuttings will want to flower instead of grow and will not make healthy plants.

Zonal Geraniums.

It is really remarkable how many complaints we get from people who say that their geraniums do not flower We have had quite a different experience. Our zonal geraniums would, from May 1, flower themselves to death if we did not pick off many of the full blown trusses. This is by no design of ours. Perhaps it is merely the soil. For the first two or three weeks of January we are busy shifting the geraniums from 2-inch to 3-inch pots. This is a small shift, but you can always so reduce the ball that it will make it a substantial shift. Some growers will say this is too great an expense. If you want fine 4-inch geraniums in May it will pay. In shifting use a heavy loam, with little, if any, animal manure. The only manure of that kind that you should use would be the remains of an old hotbed, which could only be of mechanical benefit to the soil.

About the first part of February you should move and go over all your 3-inch geraniums. Most of them will give you a cutting. Don't ruin or stunt a plant for the sake of a cutting. If the growth is not sufficiently long to give you a cutting, then just nip out the center of growth and you will have an extra fine branching plant, but the majority will give you a cutting and still leave you enough stem to branch and make a good plant. Firm, hard potting at this time is of great consequence, but not so important as the later shift from 3-inch to 4-inch pots.

The cuttings you take off the young plants should not be put into the sand. Put them into 2-inch pots, making sure the soil is firm and compact around the base of each cutting and place the pots on a bench in a house where the temperature is 50 degrees. Water once thoroughly and then give no more water until the plants are decidedly dry. You should not lose ten per cent of them. Plants rooted in the pots are much better than those rooted in sand. These winter-struck plants will not be as large or early as those you are shifting into 3-inch, but they will come in for late beds in June. This class of geraniums is largely succulent and will do with less water than is generally given them. Let them be decidedly dry before you water. Up to the first part of April you do not want them to grow and make leaves; you only want them to make good roots in the 3-inch pots.

There is one advantage in an early Easter; you have a chance to attend to your bedding plants, so this year you will be able, early in April, to give your zonal geraniums their 4-inch pots. Avoid any rich manure, which will produce leaves and not flowers. At this shifting pot firmly, using a fresh loam with the addition of a 4-inch pot of bone flour to a bushel of soil. Pot firmly and give geraniums at all times the fullest light and plenty of ventilation.

Do this and I do not see how you can complain that your geraniums do not flower. We have often seen geraniums, tall, leafy things, grown in partial shade, but always found such plants were grown in soil that was half rotten manure or leaf-mold and they had gone to leaf instead of flower.

Begonia Semperflorens.

Sow seeds of Begonia semperflorens this month. The seed is very minute and needs no covering. Scatter the seeds very thinly over the freshly-watered surface of the soil and place the pots or flats where no ray of sun will reach them. This class of begonias is very useful. They make a most acceptable pot plant. They are fine for filling vases and window-boxes and some of the varieties make splendid flower beds. You cannot sow the small seeds too thinly. WILLIAM SCOTT.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Brothers Scott, the beavers, the deer and the wild birds were all false prophets this year and the long, cold winter is now an impossibility. Before we know it the equinoctial storms and Easter will be here. Last week was one of rains, fogs and high temperatures and this week opens just as depressingly, with little prospect of clear, cold, seasonable weather. The result of it all is seen in the color of the flowers and the scarcity of fine roses, while the influence of clouds and wind is felt in every department of the florists' trade. All prices have naturally fallen. The best Beauties seldom go above $50 per hundred and Bride, Maid, Killarney and the red roses especially, have all declined in values. The same may be said of carnations, valley and even cattleyas, while of hyacinths and narcissi there is enough and to spare. With a change to winter weather will come a brisk demand, better quality of stock and a revival in the general business that has already been too long delayed.

President's Dinner.

President C. H. Totty, of the New York Florists' Club, entertained at dinner on Saturday evening, at the Hotel Earlington, the following gentlemen whom he constituted his cabinet, and in addition the secretary of the S. A. F., P. J. Hauswirth, of Chicago: John Birnie, Wm. Duckham, A. J. Manda, J. B.

Delivery Team Belonging to C. C. Trefel, Brooklyn, N. Y.

(The value of the outfit is $1,500.)

Nugent, Jr., J. H. Pepper, W. J. Stewart, Walter Sheridan, John Scott, J. Austin Shaw, F. H. Traendly, Chas. B. Weathered, L. W. Wheeler, and John Young. Patrick O'Mara and others were prevented by illness from being present. The dinner was flawless. Many suggestions looking to a year of unequaled prosperity for the club were made and a good many novel and helpful methods were discussed that cannot fail to bear fruit. An interesting address was made by Secretary Hauswirth. How to run a successful flower show was elaborated. The consent of Mr. Nugent to supervise the commissary another year was welcomed with enthusiasm. John Birnie spoke for the canteen and its refining power. Mr. Duckham and Mr. Manda represented the private gardeners and prophesied large accessions of these to the club membership.

The president of the S. A. F. had many interesting reminiscences and much good advice on tap. Everyone present evinced the liveliest interest in the club's welfare. Mr. Traendly resumed the captaincy of the outing ship. But the theme of greatest interest was the establishment of a permanent home for the club, with all the conveniences of libraries, bowling alleys and the other modern club requisites so alluringly exhibited by the Philadelphia brethren. It was unanimously acknowledged that the time was ripe. President Totty, notwithstanding a week of grip and slow convalescence, was full of enthusiasm and valuable suggestions and these, with many others made at the dinner, will be incorporated in his address and read at the club meeting on Monday evening. It was the Lord's day, as Bro. Birnie expressed it, when the congregation dispersed, after one of the most enjoyable and interesting evenings of the dinner season. The decorations were of Elsa Struss carnations supplied by John Young.

Club Meeting.

The first meeting in 1907 of the Florists' Club was a hummer, nearly 100 members being present and the keenest interest being maintained until nearly midnight. The success of the Totty administration is already assured. His address was a model of conciseness, practicability and simple eloquence. Following this splendid effort were practical and appreciative addresses by the new officers and trustees, Messrs. A. J. Manda, John Young, L. W. Wheeler, John Scott, Walter Sheridan and John Donaldson.

The president appointed the following committees: Legislature — Messrs. O'Mara, Sheridan and Hallock; essays —Messrs. Scott, O'Mara and Wallace; awards—Messrs. Duckham, Hurrell; Jos. Manda, Harry Turner, Pye, Hoffmeyer and Butterfield; exhibition—Messrs. Jas. Scott, Guttman, Weber, Kessler, Weston and Dailledouze; outing—Traendly, Shaw, Burnett, Al Rickards, Donaldson, Gottlieb, Marshall, Zeller and Langjahr; house and entertainment—Messrs. Nugent, Will Rickards and Robert Schultz; dinner—Messrs. Scott, Birnie and Sheridan.

The report of Mr. Weathered, the retiring treasurer, showed a balance of over $2,000 in the treasury. The unanimous vote of thanks from the club attested the appreciation felt for the nineteen years of faithful service given by Mr. Weathered. Later in the evening practical demonstration of his popularity was shown in the presentation through Mr. Sheridan, on behalf of the club, of a beautiful and valuable solid silver tea service.

The resolutions on the death of Mrs. E. V. Hallock were adopted.

The six gentlemen proposed at the last meeting for membership were elected, and Robert Berry, Henry Hornecker, Albert Weisenberger, August Bergerot, A. F. Faulkner and Geo. E. Dickinson were nominated.

The award committee reported favorably on the exhibits of Salvia nana compacta, from F. G. Mense, of Glen Cove, L. I.; Beacon carnations, from the Cottage Gardens Co.; three varieties of cypripediums, from Edward J. Norman, of Lee, Mass.; a plant of Moschosma riparium, from William Duckham, of Madison, and a patented pot hanger from W. C. Krick, of Brooklyn.

Messrs. Nugent and Rickards inaugurated their regime with an abundance of good things to eat. Phil. Hauswirth thought their work was above par. His speech was heartily applauded and his ideas on closer relations with the S. A. F. and the desirability of membership in the parent society met with sincere approval. He spoke for the national show at Chicago in 1908. President Totty told of the excellent management of the Chicago show of 1906. Benj. Hammond gave a splendid address in behalf of the rose meeting at Washington in March. He was ably seconded by Robert Simpson, president of the rose society.

President Totty was authorized to appoint a committee on closer relations with the S. A. F. and it was decided to have the club's annual dinner early in February.

Patrick O'Mara is recovering from a severe attack of the grip but was unable to attend the meeting of the Florists' Club Monday evening, much to his regret. Several members of his family are suffering from the same disease, which is now epidemic in New York and vicinity. In fact, dozens in the trade are ill and the majority have already had a siege of it. There seems to be no worse climate than this for the development of this annoying form of influenza and in some cases pneumonia has followed it.

Harry Bunyard is back from his western and Canadian trip and says it has been the most successful since his connection with the seed house of A. T. Boddington. Mr. Boddington has had his share of the grip with the rest of his brethren. D. P. Roy, of Montreal, long with the seed house of W. W. Ewing & Co., is now with this house.

William F. Kasting, of Buffalo, was an expected visitor in the city Monday, but failed to reach the club meeting as anticipated. However, the president and secretary of the Rose Society and the president and secretary of the S. A. One of the striking evidences of the wonderful telephone development is presented by the telephone directory, which is now a book of 738 pages, weighing three pounds, and containing the names of the telephone subscribers of New York and vicinity. This book is revised and distributed every four months, the size of the edition being graphically shown by the fact that one edition of the books fills a train of twenty-five freight cars. In the flower stores the book has come to be considered the best general directory of New York and vicinity, which is a further indication of the completeness of the telephone development.

SEEDING OF LORRAINE.

In the issue of the Gardeners' Chronicle for December 15 there was a note on Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, by B. Cromwell as follows: "The stock was raised by leaf propagation from cuttings, and from seed, the latter germinating on the surface of the pans, which last year were suspended in the corridor, thus showing clearly that B. Gloire de Lorraine will reproduce itself from seed providing the atmospheric surroundings are suitable."

There are many growers who have yet to learn that Begonia Gloire de Lorraine does produce seed. We shall be much surprised if the note by Mr. Cromwell does not fall as a bombshell on the ears of many professional men. The theory that hybrids are not capable of reproducing themselves by seed is, we know, gradually being broken down; but that B. Gloire de Lorraine is assisting in upsetting this theory is somewhat surprising. The number of articles that have been published during the past fifteen years, in reference to the propagation and cultivation of this plant are enormous; but we do not recollect reading of anyone being successful in the saving of seed, at least with one exception. A note appeared in the Gardeners' Chronicle about six years ago. It had been inserted by a leading firm of nurserymen, and stated that they had been successful in the raising (not saving) of seed, and that they hoped at a future date to be in a position to exhibit the plants at a meeting of the Royal Horticultural Society. Whether they had the "honor" of doing this we trow not.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Bougainvilleas.

If you have any bougainvilleas that have been resting it is time to get them into a warmer house and freely water and syringe them. They will break from the ripened wood and the breaks will be flowers.

Gardenias.

You can put in cuttings of gardenias now. The very tender, young growths are not suitable for cuttings. What florists call the half-ripened wood of last fall is more suitable for cuttings. Put them in sand where the bottom heat is 70 degrees and they will soon root. We lately saw a lot of gardenias from which we thought something might be learned. These were a lot in 6-inch pots that had been lifted from a bed where they had been planted out. The foliage was yellow, as it had been on the plants before lifting, while half a dozen large plants in 9-inch pots were as green as bay trees and covered with buds. Possibly while planted out the smaller plants were overwatered, and, it being a rather cool house for gardenias, the plants could not use all the material given them; while the larger plants were a mass of roots and did absorb all the moisture provided them.

Dutch Hyacinths.

You can bring into the greenhouse now at any time a few hundred pots of Dutch hyacinth. They are always welcome. Give them, after the first few days inside, a temperature of 60 degrees to 65 degrees and they soon will be in flower. The first batch will take two weeks longer to come into flower than do succeeding crops.

Fuchsias.

You should put in all the vigorous fuchsia cuttings this month. Fuchsias put in the sand this month will make quick growing, vigorous plants that will be in flower in May. After the end of this month you can no longer get good fuchsia cuttings. The old plants are so anxious to grow the cuttings will want to flower instead of grow and will not make healthy plants.

Zonal Geraniums.

It is really remarkable how many complaints we get from people who say that their geraniums do not flower We have had quite a different experience. Our zonal geraniums would, from May 1, flower themselves to death if we did not pick off many of the full blown trusses. This is by no design of ours. Perhaps it is merely the soil. For the first two or three weeks of January we are busy shifting the geraniums from 2-inch to 3-inch pots. This is a small shift, but you can always so reduce the ball that it will make it a substantial shift. Some growers will say this is too great an expense. If you want fine 4-inch geraniums in May it will pay. In shifting use a heavy loam, with little, if any, animal manure. The only manure of that kind that you should use would be the remains of an old hotbed, which could only be of mechanical benefit to the soil.

About the first part of February you should move and go over all your 3-inch geraniums. Most of them will give you a cutting. Don't ruin or stunt a plant for the sake of a cutting. If the growth is not sufficiently long to give you a cutting, then just nip out the center of growth and you will have an extra fine branching plant, but the majority will give you a cutting and still leave you enough stem to branch and make a good plant. Firm, hard potting at this time is of great consequence, but not so important as the later shift from 3-inch to 4-inch pots.

The cuttings you take off the young plants should not be put into the sand. Put them into 2-inch pots, making sure the soil is firm and compact around the base of each cutting and place the pots on a bench in a house where the temperature is 50 degrees. Water once thoroughly and then give no more water until the plants are decidedly dry. You should not lose ten per cent of them. Plants rooted in the pots are much better than those rooted in sand. These winter-struck plants will not be as large or early as those you are shifting into 3-inch, but they will come in for late beds in June. This class of geranium is largely succulent and will do with less water than is generally given them. Let them be decidedly dry before you water. Up to the first part of April you do not want them to grow and make leaves; you only want them to make good roots in the 3-inch pots.

There is one advantage in an early Easter; you have a chance to attend to your bedding plants, so this year you will be able, early in April, to give your zonal geraniums their 4-inch pots. Avoid any rich manure, which will produce leaves and not flowers. At the shifting pot firmly, using a fresh loam with the addition of a 4-inch pot of bone flour to a bushel of soil. Pot firmly and give geraniums at all times the fullest light and plenty of ventilation.

Do this and I do not see how you can complain that your geraniums do not flower. We have often seen geraniums, tall, leafy things, grown in partial shade, but always found such plants were grown in soil that was half rotten manure or leaf-mold and they had gone to leaf instead of flower.

Begonia Semperflorens.

Sow seeds of Begonia semperflorens this month. The seed is very minute and needs no covering. Scatter the seeds very thinly over the freshly watered surface of the soil and place the pots or flats where no ray of sun will reach them. This class of begonias is very useful. They make a most acceptable pot plant. They are fine for filling vases and window-boxes and some of the varieties make splendid flower beds. You cannot sow the small seeds too thinly. William Scott.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Brothers Scott, the beavers, the deer and the wild birds were all false prophets this year and the long, cold winter is now an impossibility. Before we know it the equinoctial storms and Easter will be here. Last week was one of rains, fogs and high temperatures and this week opens just as depressingly, with little prospect of clear, cold, seasonable weather. The result of it all is seen in the color of the flowers and the scarcity of fine roses, while the influence of clouds and wind is felt in every department of the florists' trade. All prices have naturally fallen. The best Beauties seldom go above $50 per hundred and Bride, Maid, Killarney and the red roses especially, have all declined in values. The same may be said of carnations, valley and even cattleyas, while of hyacinths and narcissi there is enough and to spare. With a change to winter weather will come a brisk demand, better quality of stock and a revival in the general business that has already been too long delayed.

President's Dinner.

President C. H. Totty, of the New York Florists' Club, entertained at dinner on Saturday evening, at the Hotel Earlington, the following gentlemen whom he constituted his cabinet, and in addition the secretary of the S. A. F., P. J. Hauswirth, of Chicago: John Birnie, Wm. Duckham, A. J. Manda, J. B.

Nugent, Jr., J. H. Pepper, W. J. Stewart, Walter Sheridan, John Scott, J. Austin Shaw, F. H. Traendly, Chas. B. Weathered, L. W. Wheeler, and John Young. Patrick O'Mara and others were prevented by illness from being present. The dinner was flawless. Many suggestions looking to a year of unequaled prosperity for the club were made and a good many novel and helpful methods were discussed that cannot fail to bear fruit. An interesting address was made by Secretary Hauswirth. How to run a successful flower show was elaborated. The consent of Mr. Nugent to supervise the commissary another year was welcomed with enthusiasm. John Birnie spoke for the canteen and its refining power. Mr. Duckham and Mr. Manda represented the private gardeners and prophesied large accessions of these to the club membership.

The president of the S. A. F. had many interesting reminiscences and much good advice on tap. Everyone present evinced the liveliest interest in the club's welfare. Mr. Traendly resumed the captaincy of the outing ship. But the theme of greatest interest was the establishment of a permanent home for the club, with all the conveniences of libraries, bowling alleys and the other modern club requisites so alluringly exhibited by the Philadelphia brethren. It was unanimously acknowledged that the time was ripe. President Totty, notwithstanding a week of grip and slow convalescence, was full of enthusiasm and valuable suggestions and these, with many others made at the dinner, will be incorporated in his address and read at the club meeting on Monday evening. It was the Lord's day, as Bro. Birnie expressed it, when the congregation dispersed, after one of the most enjoyable and interesting evenings of the dinner season. The decorations were of Elsa Struss carnations supplied by John Young.

Club Meeting.

The first meeting in 1907 of the Florists' Club was a hummer, nearly 100 members being present and the keenest interest being maintained until nearly midnight. The success of the Totty administration is already assured. His address was a model of conciseness, practicability and simple eloquence. Following this splendid effort were practical and appreciative addresses by the new officers and trustees, Messrs. A. J. Manda, John Young, L. W. Wheeler, John Scott, Walter Sheridan and John Donaldson.

The president appointed the following committees: Legislature — Messrs. O'Mara, Sheridan and Hallock; essays —Messrs. Scott, O'Mara and Wallace; awards—Messrs. Duckham, Hurrell; Jos. Manda, Harry Turner, Pye, Hoffmeyer and Butterfield; exhibition—Messrs. Jas. Scott, Guttman, Weber, Kessler, Weston and Dailledouze; outing—Traendly, Shaw, Burnett, Al Rickards, Donaldson, Gottlieb, Marshall, Zeller and Langjahr; house and entertainment—Messrs. Nugent, Will Rickards and Robert Schultz; dinner—Messrs. Scott, Birnie and Sheridan.

The report of Mr. Weathered, the retiring treasurer, showed a balance of over $2,000 in the treasury. The unanimous vote of thanks from the club attested the appreciation felt for the nineteen years of faithful service given by Mr. Weathered. Later in the evening practical demonstration of his popularity was shown in the presentation through Mr. Sheridan, on behalf of the club, of a beautiful and valuable solid silver tea service.

The resolutions on the death of Mrs. E. V. Hallock were adopted.

The Rickards brothers, the seedsmen, have been making melody at the Madison smoker and the Red Bank dinner and are booked for every horticultural

The New York Florists' Club depends on them to manage its musical programs. Their business is growing beyond all expectations. Albert Rickards is now visiting his customers on Long Island.

Once more we may remind you of the carnation convention at Toronto, so that you may still secure a berth in the special car that leaves the Grand Central depot of the New York Central at 8 p. m. Tuesday, January 22. Make no mistake as to the hour and secure tickets in advance. The attendance from the city and vicinity will be large and all anticipate a delightful outing in the land of ice and snow. If all these sick ones in this damp, grippy climate could get a few days of the dry, pure air of Toronto, they would be well. The carnation convention is almost as popular as the S. A. F. convention nowadays and the new and grand varieties grown and sent out from this center compare with any in the world. It is little wonder the attendance from New York will be a large and creditable one.

W. H. Donohoe had the family order for a large funeral at West Brighton, Staten Island, last week, which included a palm decoration, a casket cover of 4,000 violets and a standing wreath of valley and orchids.

Beecher said that, "in the smile of a child and the sweet face of the rose he could see the Infinite," and so in the elaborate window display at Alex. McConnell's, in the Arcade, you can imagine you see about everything worth seeing in floral combination and beauty.

Some remarkable exhibits are to be seen in the Broadway and Fifth avenue windows, at times bordering on the sensational: marble statuary, ribbons in profusion, trunks filled with orchids, great Japanese and European vases filled with spring flowers, forsythia and double flowering plum. After all, why not anything that will attract and advertise and so increase a public interest? Basket combinations are most artistically managed. The new ferns are grand acquisitions. These and many other novelties are being used to open the blind eyes and appeal to the dormant artistic taste of the great multitude who day and night wander up and down the great white way.

Wm. Starke has been ill with the grip and so is in the fashion. His plant trade continues to increase and more room is a necessity.

C. Bonnet, of Bonnet & Blake, Brooklyn, has about regained his health after nearly three months' ordeal that reduced him over fifty pounds in weight.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

NEWPORT, R. I.

Changes in Ownership.

For a few years several prominent Newport summer residents have absented themselves from the queen of summer resorts. This fact in some degree affected commercial horticulture, but not to a great extent, because in many cases the residences of those absentees were each year leased by others. Now several of those, who in recent years have leased places here, have purchased large estates lately owned by persons who had become indifferent to the attractions of Newport and there is much gladness in the hearts of many engaged in the retail trade.

The most notable of recent transactions of the kind referred to is the purchase, by William B. Leeds, of Rough Point, the beautiful estate of F. W. Vanderbilt. Mr. and Mrs. Leeds, since they have made Newport their summer home, have been among the most lavish entertainers and their entertainments were invariably noted for the grandeur of the floral decorations. There are vague rumors that a range of greenhouses will be built for supplying plants, fruits and flowers to the new owners of Rough Point.

Pembroke Jones has also purchased a large estate and has engaged P. Devine, lately gardener for the Baroness Seilierre, to superintend improvements and alterations. It is more than probable that greenhouses will be built by Mr. Jones.

Society Meeting.

The Newport Horticultural Society held its first meeting of the year, January 8, in the society's hall in the Mercury building, President Bruce Butterton in the chair. At a meeting of the executive committee, held a week before, it was voted to make the following recommendations to the society: That during the year 1907 two exhibitions of plants, flowers, fruits, vegetables and decorations be held in Masonic hall; that the amount of money to be appropriated for premiums should not be less than $1,000; that the price of admission be reduced from 50 cents to 25 cents, and that music and dancing should take up a part of at least one evening of each exhibition. All the recommendations were adopted.

The first exhibition will be, in great part, of roses and the exact time at which it will be held will be decided later, but it will most likely be in the last week in June or the first week in July. The other exhibition will just as likely be held in early September, when dahlias will again be a prominent feature.

A communication was read from Professor Wheeler, of the Rhode Island Experiment Station, in which he stated his willingness to deliver one or more lectures before the society during the winter. The secretary was requested to accept the offer on behalf of the society and invite Professor Wheeler to deliver the first address Tuesday evening, January 22. The subject of the address will be, "Soda in the Soil in its Relation to Plant Growth."

As the question of attendance at meetings is one that concerns every horticultural organization throughout the country, it may be of general interest to make it known that this society has had distributed to all its members a handsome calendar with the name and address of the president and secretary, with the day of the week and date upon which the meetings are held, prominently printed on them. This will, it is hoped, act as a sufficient reminder, to members, of their duty to themselves and to the society during the coming year.

Annual Ball.

The annual ball of the Newport Horticultural Society was held in Masonic hall January 9. For a month one of the best committees ever connected with the society was exceedingly busy in the preparations for this event. This committee consisted of Bruce Butterton, Daniel Coughlan, John T. Allan and Alexander Fraser; and to say that their work was well done would only be giving them meager credit. The committee met with unprecedented success, with the result that the other evening there gathered at the hall to make merry a larger and more congenial crowd than hitherto has met on a like occasion.

The hall was beautifully decorated with wreathing, bay trees, palms and bells, all of which were illuminated by electric lights innumerable. The stage was bordered from end to end with specimen plants of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, donated by R. & J. Farquhar & Co., of Boston. Other out-of-town firms taking a substantial interest in the affair included, Stump & Walter, Hitchings & Co., Weeber & Don, Lord & Burnham, of New York, and Schlegel & Fottler, of Boston.

The grand march was led by Daniel Coughlan and Mrs. W. Allan, Jr. The Harry K. Howard orchestra furnished the music.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Current Comment.

Trade and weather conditions remain unchanged from last week. An average temperature of about 55 degrees in mid-winter is certainly strange in this latitude. Of course all kinds of stock shows the effects of so much warmth and cloudiness and all are wishing for colder weather and sunshine.

Association Meeting.

The twentieth annual meeting of the State Florists' Association of Indiana was a great success, both in attendance and exhibits. Great interest was shown in the business transacted and it is hoped much good will result from this meeting. The schedule for the judging of flowers and plants was taken up and adopted unanimously. Two amendments were made to the constitution of the society, defining the duties of the executive committee. Ira Clark, of Greensburg, and Albert Pettit, of this city, were elected members. The officers for 1907 are: Herman Junge, president; Charles Knopf, Richmond, first vice-president; F. Hukriede, second vice-president; A. F. J. Baur, secretary, and John Heidenreich, treasurer.

A nice lot of carnations were exhibited and much admired and certificates were awarded to the following:

Sarah Hill, a large white, shown by the B. K. & B. Floral Co., scored eighty-seven points; Superior, a large, bright pink, shown by the same firm, scored eighty-five points; St. Nicholas, a fine scarlet, and May, a nice, light pink, shown by Baur & Smith, each scored eighty-five points.

Mabelle, shown by Weber & Sons Co., gained the honor and was well thought of by all. The color is extremely good and should fill a long-felt want in the pink class.

Pink Imperial, shown by J. E. Haines, had no opposition. It is in a class by itself. The large flowers of deep color and long stems put it head and shoulders above any other exhibit in the room. Imperial is all right, but the color won't go in this section. Striped carnations of any color never have made much of a hit with the flower buyers of this city.

Winsor was shown by F. R. Pierson Co., but, owing to the long time it was on the road, was not in its best shape and those present who saw it last March at Cincinnati were sorry, as they knew what a fine thing it was there. It is one of the most pleasing shades of pink yet introduced.

The E. G. Hill Co. sent a vase of their rose, Rhea Riede, which scored ninety points. It had splendid red foliage, stem and bud being nearly perfect. They also had a vase of seedling carnations, some showing extra merit.

Stuart & Haugh showed some vases of nice Cardinal, Enchantress, Bountiful and Lawson carnations which received special mention.

F. Harritt extended an invitation to the society to hold its picnic on his grounds, at Willowmere, some time in June, which, of course, was quickly accepted.

Quite a number sat down to supper and a most enjoyable social time was had. Among the members from out of town were: F. Lemon and Charles Knopf, Richmond; W. W. Coles, Kokomo; J. E. A. Haugh, Anderson; Ira Clark, Greensburg and George Moore, Rushville. S.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The first half of January has been characterized by abnormally mild weather. Owing, however, to lack of sunshine the market has not been overburdened with flowers, and prices, as a consequence, have held up fairly well. There has been no decided change in prices of either roses or carnations. Both are cleaning up well. Violets are sufficient for all needs. A slump in prices is likely at any time, from the dollar mark, which has been the ruling figure for good stock since the holidays.

Bulbous stock comes more abundantly. Yellow daffodils sell well, realizing as much as $5 per hundred for the best. Le Reine is the leading tulip and is now arriving of good quality. Paper Whites and Romans are overplentiful. Some good freesia is seen. This realizes good prices, the pure white variety being most favored. A better supply of Lilium Harrisii and callas is arriving, but prices on these hold up well. Green stock remains about the same.

Club Meeting.

The meeting on January 15 drew the largest attendance of any regular gathering in the club's history, about 300 ladies and gentlemen being present. The principal attraction was the stereopticon lecture on southern Europe by John K. M. L. Farquhar. The views of Italian gardens showed these to be very different from the "creations" by landscape architects in America. Much of horticultural interest was gleaned from this lecture, which was given for the first time and embraced the leading sights seen during Mr. Farquhar's sojourn in Europe last summer. A pleasing additional feature was a preliminary talk on club matters illustrated with lantern views of leading club officials, past and present. An enthusiastic vote of thanks was tendered the lecturer.

President Wheeler welcomed the large audience in a few well chosen words. He expressed his grateful thanks to the secretary, treasurer and the members of the executive committee for the faithful and hard work during his tenure of office. The club members were also thanked for their kindness and staunch support in every effort he had made for their welfare. Whenever they had been asked to contribute anything it had been done most cheerfully and every committee appointed had rendered loyal service. They had worked together with one object, viz., the uplifting and advancement of their profession, and that they had accomplished something the present condition of the club speaks eloquently. He tendered special thanks to the reporters of the horticultural press for their liberal notices, which had done much to hold the interest of the members, and concluded amid warm applause by introducing T. H. Westwood, his successor, as one who had ever attended the meetings with regularity and worked in every possible way for the best interests of the club.

Mr. Westwood received an enthusiastic greeting on rising. In the course of his remarks he said the membership of the club had increased rapidly in the last three years. They hardly expect to grow quite so rapidly in numbers in the present year, as the various elements were already largely represented in the club. They expect, however, to grow on other lines. The landscape classes are but the beginning in a small way along educational lines of greater things to come. The papers read at the regular meetings ought to be of first importance and efforts will be made to have the best speakers procurable on the several subjects to be handled during 1907. It should be the club's province to assist deserving members who may be out of positions. It would also add dignity to the club to enroll as honorary members some of the men of eminence in which Boston is rich, who have performed valiant service for the various branches of the profession.

The secretary in his report stated that the club had made a net gain over all losses of 240 since January, 1905. He believes Boston should hold a membership of 400 in its club without trouble. He stated that he has received inquiries in regard to the landscape classes from as far away as Wisconsin and Colorado, showing the interest this branching out has caused. He believes a plan whereby certificates could be presented to those who had taken landscape courses would be of great benefit to them in later life.

Treasurer Hatch in his annual report, presented in his own inimitable way, gave a timely talk on thrift. He was glad there is a balance of over $200 on the right side for 1906 and the club should make an effort to add a substantial sum to its bank account each year.

Seven new members were elected. Wm. Nicholson resigned from the executive board, giving ill health as his reason. Mr. Downs was elected to the vacancy.

Miss Gray furnished readings. There were several fine exhibits. Reports of merit were given to the following: Wm. Sim, for Violet Boston; R. & J. Farquhar & Co., for Begonia Lorraine superba, with very large flowers; Mr. Downs, for specimen plants of Lorraine; S. J. Goddard, for cyclamens. Peter Fisher received a report of superior merit for Carnation Beacon.

An amendment to the constitution relative to voting members, election of new members, reports of committees on exhibits, and other matters occupied some time. Refreshments were served and it was quite a late hour ere the meeting closed.

Various Notes.

The winter lecture course at Horticultural hall opened January 12 with an exhaustive and eminently practical talk on iris culture by J. Woodward Manning. The various species were illustrated by lantern-slide views, which made it the more interesting. Many questions were asked at the close of the lecture.

The elaborate floral decorations at the ball given by Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Thomas, January, 11, at the Hotel Somerset for the coming out of their daughter were furnished by T. F. Galvin. An immense amount of material was used.

The opening exhibition of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society will be held January 26. Carnations will be one of the principal features. The new schedules are now ready and may be obtained from W. P. Rich, the general superintendent at Horticultural hall.

The annual banquet tendered to the employees of A. H. Hews & Co. was held January 12 in Odd Fellows' hall, North Cambridge.

The Pierson U-Bar Co. has secured the contract for a splendid block of greenhouses for Senator N. W. Aldrich, Warwick, R. I., where F. C. Green is superintendent.

W. W. Rawson will celebrate his sixtieth birthday January 23 with a banquet at the Hotel Vendome.

The father of N. & M. Wax, the well-known florists, attained his seventy-seventh birthday January 13 and was well remembered by his sons on the occasion.

J. R. Lasseman is handling some extra fine freesia this season. He has the honor of being first in the market with it.

A good delegation to the carnation convention at Toronto seems probable at this time. It is to be hoped that a January blizzard will be escaped.

W. N. CRAIG.

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y.

The regular meeting of the Dobbs Ferry Horticultural Association was held in Odd Fellows' hall Saturday evening, January 12, Joseph Bradley in the chair. The exhibits of the evening were bunches of fifty double violets. H. Kartberg, gardener to the Misses Masters, was awarded the first prize and H. Keeling, gardener to Mr. McComb, second. John Holgerson also staged some fine violets. Joseph Bradley, gardener to H. Sidenberg Hastings, staged some tomatoes, The Don, and was awarded a cultural certificate.

The exhibits for the next regular meeting are to be flowering pot plants in no more than 6-inch pots.

The society received a letter from the Dobbs Ferry Hospital Association thanking them very kindly for the amount they had received from that society. J. B.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN. —R. A. Stegall, who was formerly located in Texarkana, Ark., is now established in business in this place. He reports Christmas trade as excellent, but the continual cloudy weather caused a heavy loss on roses.

HORTICULTURAL printing is showing another improvement in quality this season.

THE Philadelphians already are at work on arrangements for the August convention of the S. A. F.

It is the purpose of the Editor to cause the REVIEW to be unlike other publications for our trade. This will account for the non-appearance of certain manuscripts and illustrations sent simultaneously to all the papers. Inevitably certain matters must be duplicated, but it is useless to expect anyone to read a write-up twice, no matter how well prepared.

THE DEATH ROLL.

James Brails.

James Brails, assistant superintendent of parks at Buffalo, died at noon on Wednesday, January 16. He was a good and splendid man. W. S.

Reinhold Gidionsen.

Reinhold Gidionsen, a veteran florist, 87 years old, died at his home in St. Louis, Mo., January 8. He had been a resident of St. Louis for thirty-three years. He was born in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, and participated in the revolution of 1848. He leaves a wife, four sons, Albert, Herman, Edward and Oscar, and a daughter, Dora Gidionsen.

REMEMBER THE CERTIFICATE.

Those who attend the Toronto convention next week should not fail to tell the ticket agent, when purchasing the railroad ticket, "I want a certificate on account of the meeting of the American Carnation Society." Get the certificate anyway, no matter if you do not intend to use it to save yourself two-thirds the fare on the return journey. Get it to help save the other fellows' money. The reduced fare returning does not apply unless 100 certificates are turned over to the secretary. Last year at Boston, with an attendance of 200 to 300, there were only eighty-four certificates, so many had failed to ask for them, and it was late when it was discovered. The difficulty was remedied by telephoning to a florist out aways, who brought sixteen employees and friends to town on the last train. It saved the day, but it was a close call.

The Editor is pleased when a Reader presents his ideas on any subject treated

THE WEEKLY FLORISTS' REVIEW

As experience is the best teacher, so do we learn fastest by an exchange of experiences. Many valuable points are brought out by discussion.

Good penmanship, spelling and grammar, though desirable, are not necessary. Write as you would talk when doing your best.

WE SHALL BE GLAD TO HEAR FROM YOU.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Lorraine at Christmas.

In the REVIEW of January 10 I note that your Kansas City correspondent very truthfully states that "flowering plants took the lead" at Christmas, but he makes an error when he says that Begonia Gloire de Lorraine is not a good seller or a popular plant. If the correspondent had spent a short time at 1017 Broadway (the store of Sam Murray), where Lorraine is handled, he would not think it had a dark future.

WALTER BERMINGHAM.

[What the correspondent actually said was: "Begonia Gloire de Lorraine is all right, but don't last long enough after being taken from the greenhouse and will never be the leading plant for Christmas." Mr. Bermingham, who is Mr. Murray's foreman, has had exceptional success in growing Lorraine, as REVIEW readers have reason to know because of the several photographs of his plants reproduced in its columns in the last couple of years, and there is no doubt they sell, but that there is anything in the enduring qualities of the plant to recommend it to customers we have not yet heard; in fact, we believe the best most retailers are willing to say for Lorraine is that it will keep at least as long as holiday cut flowers.—ED.]

Mice Eating Swainsona.

I read in a recent issue of the REVIEW about someone who was having trouble because an unknown pest was eating swainsona. I had the same trouble a while ago, but I invested in a couple of mouse traps and soon saw what it was caused the damage. After I had caught six or eight mice that I had not known were in the greenhouses I had no further trouble.

GEORGE ALLARD.

An English View.

I send my cheque for renewal of subscription to the REVIEW and am glad to say I have found it a most useful trade paper; we have nothing like it on this side of the "herring pond." The amount of information given weekly is invaluable to all growers and retailers. The cultural hints are fine. You will be interested to hear how great is the progress the American carnation is making in Great Britain. It has been adopted unanimously by the whole of the trade, Jersey and Guernsey growers especially laying themselves out to cater to the rapidly growing demand for cut blooms and plants. We now get a regular supply of fine blooms as much as four inches across on strong stems eighteen to twenty-four inches long. They are grown in pots and also on the American system of planting in benches, chiefly straight from the small pots to the benches, as the season is too short here for field planting and lifting. Our growers are now raising some fine seedlings and Smith's Brittania is worth the attention of American growers. It is a scarlet, superior to Victory or Robert Craig, fine as they are. Also Mrs. H. Burnett is a pink salmon you will hear of, a most pleasing color and different from everything now grown.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Business took a brace the latter part of last week and there was quite a cheerful tone in the market, but this week has seen a relapse. It is all blamed to the weather. It has been decidedly depressing and it seems that the whole town is ill with a cold. The local demand is confined almost entirely to stock for funeral purposes. It keeps white stuff cleaned up closely and, indeed, about the only surplus at the present time is in Lawson carnations.

The long-continued dark weather has reduced the crops of Beauty, but at the same time quality and demand have gone down so that prices are lower than at any time since Christmas. Short Beauties especially are poor. Good Brides and Maids are in strong request and holding up in price. The call for short stuff for funeral purposes has given the low grade roses unusual value and practically everything in the rose line cleans out quickly.

Carnations were in the dumps last week, sales averaging lower prices than at any time in months, but this week increased demand is resulting in better averages, although prices on fancy have been reduced in the price lists. There is considerable complaint of the softness of the flowers. They are in sore need of a few days of bright, cold weather.

There was a tremendous slump in violets last week. Receipts were not large, but the only outlet for the bulk of the stock was through the Greeks. This week they are doing a little better, Monday's demand serving to clean up the market for the first time in several days. There are increased supplies of Harrisii and callas, but Paper Whites and Romans are in lighter supply. All these sell well because of the demand for funeral work. Not many tulips are in, nor are there enough jonquils to go around. The supplies in this line will increase with great rapidity in the next few days.

There is much complaint at the quality of ferns, both those now coming from Massachusetts and those from cold storage. Green goods are not in heavy supply, nor are they in great demand. Many funeral wreaths are being made of boxwood and leucothœ and these two items move well.

Club Meeting.

There was a good attendance, and two boxes of cigars, at the Florists' Club January 10, when President H. N. Bruns called to order promptly at 8 p. m. All the new officers were present. It gives promise of being a most punctual and efficient staff. P. C. Schupp is recording secretary and E. C. Amling financial secretary.

President Bruns announced his committees, as follows: Good of the club—J. F. Klimmer, Leonard Kill, H. B. Howard; transportation—P. J. Hauswirth, George Asmus, W. N. Rudd; sports—John Degnan, Charles Balluff.

John Evart and Joseph Marks were elected to membership and A. T. Pyfer, H. Cheesman and H. Manheim were proposed.
